DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

BUREA OF RECLAMATION

The summary tables at the end of this title set forth the conference agreement with respect to the individual appropriations, programs and activities of the Bureau of Reclamation. Additional items of conference agreement are discussed below.

GENERAL INVESTIGATIONS

Amendment No. 17: Appropriates $14,190,000 for General Investigations as proposed by the House instead of $14,340,000 as proposed by the Senate.

As part of the Bureau of Reclamation's ongoing Tucson/Phoenix Water Conservation and Exchange Study, the conferees encourage the Bureau to participate with non-Federal entities in the Northwest Tucson Active Management Replenishment Program.

Amendment No. 18: Deletes language proposed by the Senate providing $500,000 for the Equus Beds project in Wichita, Kansas. Funding for this project has been provided under the Construction Program as part of the Groundwater Recharge Demonstration Program.

Amendment No. 19: Deletes language proposed by the Senate providing $50,000 for the Lewis and Clark Rural Water System, South Dakota, feasibility study.

CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Amendment No. 20: Appropriates $432,727,000 for the Bureau of Reclamation's Construction Program as proposed by the House instead of $425,727,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees have provided, under the Central Valley Project, California, $8,502,000 for the Delta Division for the purposes and priorities proposed by the House with the following changes: $400,000 for the joint Federal-state effort to address the San Francisco Bay and Sacramento San Joaquin Delta water quality efforts; $500,000 for the Delta Barriers Program; and $1,228,000 for the acquisition of Prospect Island.

The conferees have provided, under the Central Valley Project, California, $8,285,000 for the Miscellaneous Project Programs for the purposes and priorities proposed by the House with the following changes: $4,000,000 for the Unscreened Diversions Program; $300,000 for the Spring Run Salmon Program; $150,000 for the Coho Salmon Program; and $100,000 for the Salmon Stamp Program.

The conferees have provided, under the Central Valley Project, California, $3,460,000 for the Sacramento River Division for the purposes and priorities proposed by the House.

For the Shasta Division the conference agreement includes $18,000,000, $13,000,000 above the budget request, for the Shasta Dam Temperature Control Device. Including the amounts to be allocated from the Central Valley Project Restoration Fund, this provides a total of $25,037,000 for the Shasta Dam Temperature Control Device. The conferees direct the Bureau of Reclamation to award a contract to initiate construction in fiscal year 1995 and to request sufficient funds in fiscal year 1996 to keep construction of this important project on an optimum schedule.

Within available funds, the conferees direct the Bureau of Reclamation to provide $100,000 for preconstruction engineering and design work on the Colusa Basin, California, Drainage District's Watershed Integrated Resources Management Program, as described in the District's initial plan, adopted in October, 1993.

Within available funds, the conferees direct the Bureau of Reclamation to provide $100,000 for engineering, design, and construction of a replacement for the McCune Creek Siphon Crossing Putah South Canal in California. The current crossing is a public safety hazard and may adversely impact the operations of the siphon and canal.

The conferees urge the Bureau of Reclamation to reconsider the benefits of working with the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation or other entity to assist in the efficient implementation of the Central Valley Project Improvement Act. In reconsidering this issue, the Bureau of Reclamation should consult with Central Valley Project beneficiaries and other interested groups, such as environmental organizations, in selection of the entity to assist in the implementation, if needed.

The conferees are aware that the water quality within Camanche Reservoir and the Sacramento River Basin in California may be threatened by discharges from the abandoned Penn Mine. In light of this serious situation, the conferees direct the Bureau of Reclamation, in consultation with the Bureau of Mines, to make an analysis of the magnitude of the problem and potential solutions and report back to the Committee on Appropriations of the House and Senate during hearings on the fiscal year 1996 budget.

The conference agreement includes an additional $500,000 for the Groundwater Recharge Demonstration Program for the Equus Beds project in Wichita, Kansas. The Senate had proposed that this project be funded under the General Investigations account.

Amendment No. 21: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate that provides $4,827,000 for the settlement of all claims with the State of New Mexico associated with work at Costilla Dam.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

Amendment No. 22: Appropriates $284,300,000 for Operation and Maintenance instead of $286,521,000 as proposed by the House and $282,165,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees have provided $70,504,000 for operation and maintenance activities associated with the Central Valley Project in California, $2,135,000 above the budget request. The additional funds should be used for replacements, additions, and extraordinary maintenance items.

The conference agreement includes $6,226,000 for the Water Management and Conservation Program for fiscal year 1995. This amount includes $500,000 for the Deschutes River, Oregon, project as described in the Senate report.

Amendment No. 23: Deletes language proposed by the Senate providing $300,000 for a regional drought mitigation center located within the Great Plains Region.

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION LOANS PROGRAM ACCOUNT

Amendment No. 24: Appropriates $9,000,000 for the Bureau of Reclamation Loans Program, excluding administrative expenses, as proposed by the House instead of $6,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement includes a total of $9,000,000 for Bureau of Reclamation loans in fiscal year 1995. The funds appropriated include $6,000,000 for the initiation of new loans. On May 18, 1994, the Secretary of the Interior transmitted to Congress his approval of eight projects under the Small Reclamation Project Act. Those projects are the Castroville Irrigation Water Supply Project, California; the Water Reclamation Facility for Crop Irrigation Project, Monterey County, California; the Temescal Valley Project, California; the Chino Basin Desalination Project, California; the Ute Mountain Ute Indian Project, Colorado; the Milltown Hill Project, Oregon; The Dalles Project, Oregon; and the Hidalgo County Irrigation Project, Texas. The conferees are also aware that the application for the San Sevaine Creek, California, project is nearing completion and will be processed when received. The funds provided for the initiation of new loans are available to start the above projects.

The conferees are aware that the Bureau of Reclamation desires to fundamentally change the Loan Program. However, until those changes occur, the conferees believe it is appropriate to proceed with projects where the applicants have complied with all the requirements of the existing authorized program. The conferees hope that the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Reclamation cooperate with this effort and budget for follow-on funding requirements.

Amendment No. 25: Provides for a limitation on the principal amount of direct loans of $23,000,000 as proposed by the House instead of $20,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

CENTRAL VALLEY PROJECT RESTORATION FUND

The conferees agree with the language in the House report regarding projects to be undertaken under the Central Valley Project Restoration Fund in fiscal year 1995.

GENERAL ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

The conferees are concerned that the establishment and operation of the Western Water Policy Review Commission has been delayed for nearly two years. The Commission was established pursuant to the direction contained in Public Law 102–575 which was enacted on October 30, 1992. The statute requires the Commission's report to be submitted to the President within three years of enactment. The conferees are concerned that insufficient time remains in the three-year period expiring on October 30, 1995, for the Commission to produce a high quality report. Accordingly, the conferees urge that the first meeting of the Commission be convened at the earliest possible date, and that no later than November 1, 1994, the Secretary of the Interior apprise the relevant House and Senate committees of the likelihood of the final report being completed by October 30, 1995.

TITLE III

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

. The summary tables at the end of this title set forth the conference agreement with respect to the individual appropriations, programs and activities of the Department of Energy. Additional items of conference agreement are discussed below.

APPLICATION OF GENERAL REDUCTIONS

With regard to any general reductions contained in the Fiscal Year 1995 Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act, with the exception of activities specifically addressed by the Committees, the conferees recommend that the Department of Energy apply those reductions in the most prudent and practical manner. Any such reduction should be taken in a manner that is cost effective and generally least disruptive to the Department's missions and programs. The Department continues to maintain significant amounts of prior year uncosted balances, particularly in capital equipment and construction project accounts. In applying any general reductions, the Department should seek to reduce these balances as much as possible. Furthermore, the Department shall consult with and make their plans for these reductions available to the House and Senate Energy and Water Development Appropriations Subcommittee prior to implementing the reductions.

The conferees agree with the provisions contained in the House report concerning Construction Project Reporting Requirements and the provisions contained in the Senate report concerning Technology Transfer, Environmental Remediation Coordination and Departmental reprogrammings.

ENERGY SUPPLY, RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES

Amendment No. 26: Appropriates $3,314,548,000 for Energy Supply, Research and Development activities instead of $3,302,170,000 as proposed by the House and $3,329,728,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 27: Deletes language proposed by the Senate concerning the construction of the Tokamak Physics Experiment including authorization restrictions.

Amendment No. 28: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert: : Provided, That the Secretary of Energy may transfer available amounts appropriated for use by the Department of Energy under title III of previously enacted Energy and Water Development Appropriations Acts into the Isotope Production and Distribution Program Fund, in order to continue isotope production and distribution activities: Provided further, That the authority to use these amounts appropriated is effective from the date of enactment of this Act: Provided further, That fees set by the Secretary for the sale of isotopes and related services shall hereafter be determined without regard to the provisions of Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act (P.L. 101–101): Provided further, That amounts provided for isotope production and distribution in previous Energy and Water Development Appropriations Acts shall be treated as direct appropriations and shall be merged with funds appropriated under this head.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Previous Energy and Water Development Appropriations Acts established an Isotope Production and Distribution Program Fund which included a working fund and the retention of revenues. The Administration has sought an amendment to fund the isotope program in the Energy Supply, Research and Development Activities appropriation in order to allow greater flexibility in the production, pricing and sale of isotopes for medical and industrial use. The conferees agree with the amendment of the Senate with an amendment that further clarifies this change.

Amendment No. 29: Deletes language proposed by the Senate specifying funding for specifice solar and renewable activities. This amendment is incorporated in the tables accompanying the statement of the managers.

Amendment No. 30: Deletes language proposed by the Senate. This language is incorporated in Amendment No. 28.

Amendment No. 31: Deletes language proposed by the Senate concerning the hydrogen research program. The hydrogen research and development program is funded at $10,000,000 as proposed by the House which represents a $4,500,000 increase over the budget request. From within these funds, up to $250,000 may be made available to an institution where expertise in electrochemical (fuel cells), thermochemical and photochemical reactions for hydrogen production may be synergistically studied and the application to gas storage and alternate vehicle technology may be integrated.

Amendment No. 32: Deletes language proposed by the Senate concerning the hydropower research and development. This amendment is incorporated in the tables accompanying the statement of the managers.

SOLAR AND RENEWABLE ENERGY PROGRAMS

The conferees agree that the solar and renewables program is funded at $388,108,000 as indicated in the tables. The programs and activities are to be funded at the highest level described in either the House or Senate reports, unless otherwise directed in this report.

The conferees direct that $5,000,000 be restored to biochemical conversion in addition to the amount in the budget request from within available funds provided for biofuel energy systems.

The conferees agree to include $14,000,000 in research funds for electric and magnetic fields research based on information that the non-Federal cost-share of the program will be $8,000,000 for fiscal year 1995.

The conferees agree to fund the hydropower research and development program at $1,500,000 as proposed by the Senate, including the jointly funded program to develop an energy-efficient turbine that reduces the environmental impact on fish species.

The conferees have provided the House-recommended level for the Geysers wastewater effluent project and recognize the potential future application of this technology to the Department of Energy in achieving the goals of the National Energy Plan.

NUCLEAR ENERGY PROGRAMS

The conferees agree to increase the funding for Advanced Light Water Reactors by $14,000,000 as proposed by the Senate which brings the total funding for this program in fiscal year 1995 to $65,000,000. The conferees recommend that the Department of Energy require that the private sector match this increase and that the Government contribution be repaid out of royalties on the first commercial sale of this reactor design.

The conferees agree to fund the passively safe Gas Turbine-Modular Helium Reactor at $12,000,000. This turbine generating system powered by a passively safe nuclear reactor offers the potential of a cleaner, more economical and safe way to generate electricity.

The conferees agree to fund the Isotope Support line item in the Energy Supply, Research and Development Activities appropriation as requested by the Administration in a budget amendment and as recommended by the Senate. The conferees also recommend eliminating the Isotope Production and Distribution appropriation as proposed by the Senate in Amendment No. 40.

The conferees have agreed to terminate the Integral Fast Reactor/Advanced Liquid Metal Reactor (IFR/ALMR) program. A total of $83,800,000 is provided for shutdown of EBR II and termination of the program beginning this fall, as proposed by the House. In the termination process, the Department is to maximize the research on actinide recycle, and, as proposed by the Administration, should also retain such facilities as necessary, especially the pyroprocessing facilities, to provide for alternative missions at Argonne National Laboratory in Idaho and Illinois. The Department is encouraged to identify alternate funding sources for the unfunded alternative missions at Argonne National Laboratory's facilities in Idaho and Illinois.

ENVIRONMENT, SAFETY AND HEALTH

Because of budget constraints and the late arrival of the Administration's budge amendment, the conferees have included $126,740,000 as proposed by the House.

BIOLOGICAL AND ENVIRONMENTAL RESEARCH

The conferees agree to provide $5,000,000 to assist the University of Nebraska Medical Center in the development of its transplant center as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees also agree to provide $5,000,000 for the Biomedical Information Communication Center at the Oregon Health Sciences University as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees provide $3,000,000 to enable the Department to proceed in fiscal year 1995 with the Conceptual Design Phase of the National Biomedical Tracer Facility (NBTF). This phase would follow the conclusions of the Institute of Medicine study on the need for the NBTF and expand the grant previously awarded during the Project Definition Phase by supporting the development of site-specific designs and program plans. The above activities should provide DOE with the information necessary to include firm recommendations on the siting and development of the NBTF in its subsequent budget requests to Congress.

MAGNETIC FUSION

It is the intent of the conferees that the Tokamak Physics Experiment (TPX) project proceed with design activity only, including industrial participation in the engineering design and research and development and includes $42,000,000 for this activity. The conferees recognize the very significant scientific accomplishments of the deuterium-tritium (D–T) experiments on the Tokamak Fusion Test Reactor (TFTR) in support of the ITER design, and it is the intent of the conferees that these important experiments continue until construction of TPX is approved. Therefore, in fiscal year 1995, $65,000,000 is provided for continuation of TFTR experiments. $8,000,000 is included for the PBX–M program. With regard to TPX design, the Department of Energy is directed to use standard, phased industrial contracts for these design activities, with options for construction that would permit continuity and would allow the project to be completed in the most efficient and cost-effective manner. $2,000,000 may be used for the purchase of long lead-time superconducting material critical to maintaining the schedule of the project.

The conferees also provide $52,000,000 for the DIII-D Tokamak facility and $8,700,000 for the Inertial Confinement Fusion program including an increase of $2,000,000 for the induction linac systems experiment (ILSE) to enable this program to proceed on a timely and cost-effective schedule.

Because of the large budgetary requirements needed in the future for the fusion energy development program and other issues related to the development of fusion as an attractive energy resource, the conferees urge the President's Advisory Council on Science and Technology to undertake a review and evaluation of magnetic fusion and inertial confinement fusion energy development. The Council is also urged to issue a report that will help shape the direction of the Nation's effort on these important energy sources for the future.

SUPPORTING RESEARCH AND TECHNICAL ANALYSIS

The conferees agree to the budget request for Advanced Computational Technology Initiatives as proposed in the budget and funded by the Senate.

The conferees recommend $20,000,000 for operating expenses and $1,000,000 for capital equipment to continue the research and design of the Advanced Neutron Source. It is the intent of the conferees that the ANS project proceed with the design activity including immediate implementation of the planned industrial participation in the engineering design and research and development.

The conferees agree to include $3,700,000 to continue the Midwest Superconductivity Consortium as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees agree to continue the support for the work done at Florida State University's Super Computations Research Institute and include $5,900,000 as proposed by the House.

The conferees agree to fund and implement Indian energy resource programs authorized under section 2603 of the Energy Policy Act of 1992 as proposed by the House. The conferees support the use of funds to initiate the Tazimina hydroelectric project near Iliamna, Alaska.

The conferees agree to provide an additional $3,000,000 for the Division of Energy Biosciences for peer-reviewed, competitive grants as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement provides $500,000 to continue the partnership begun in 1992 with Lawrence Livermore and Sandia National Laboratories, Southern University, and other institutions of higher education to support the Louisiana systemic initiative which will address the need to increase representation of minorities and women in science, math technology, engineering, and related disciplines.

The conference agreement provides an additional $5,000,000 under university and science education programs to establish the Center for Minorities in Science, Engineering, and Technology at existing facilities at Southern University and A&M College System in Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

The conferees agree with the strong support of both the House and Senate with regard to the Boron Neutron Capture Therapy Program. The conferees agree that if additional facilities are required, the Committees will entertain a proposal justifying the requirements.

ENVIRONMENTAL RESTORATION AND WASTE MANAGEMENT (NON-DEFENSE)

The conferees agree to provide $4,000,000 to continue the University Research Program in Robotics as proposed by the House.

URANIUM SUPPLY AND ENRICHMENT ACTIVITIES

The conferees agree with the increases in operating costs and construction costs as proposed by the Administration and the Senate.

URANIUM ENRICHMENT DECONTAMINATION AND DECOMMISSIONING FUND

Amendment No. 33: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which specifies the funding of title X, subtitle A of the Energy Policy Act of 1992.

GENERAL SCIENCE AND RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

Amendment No. 34: Appropriates $984,031,000 for General Science and Research Activities instead of $989,031,000 as proposed by the House and $973,632,000 as proposed by the Senate. Specific funding allocations are included in the tables accompanying this report.

Amendment No. 35: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides that not to exceed $65,000,000 shall be available as a one-time contribution for the completion, with modification, of partially completed facilities at the Superconducting Super Collider (SSC) project site if the Secretary determines such one-time contribution (i) will assist the maximization of the value of the investment made in the facilities and (ii) is in furtherance of a settlement of the claims that the State of Texas has asserted against the United States in connection with the termination of the SSC project. No funding shall be made available as a contribution to operating expenses of such facilities.

NUCLEAR WASTE DISPOSAL FUND

Amendment No. 36: Appropriates $392,800,000 for the Nuclear Waste Disposal Fund instead of $304,800,000 as proposed by the House and $402,800,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees recognize that the University of Nevada System has unique scientific expertise that can help answer questions posed by the Yucca Mountain project. To the greatest extent possible, the Department should utilize these capabilities. Therefore, the conferees direct that, of the amount appropriated herein, no less than $3,700,000 shall be available for infrastructure studies and other research and development work to be carried out by the University of Nevada-Reno, the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, the Desert Research Institute, and the Community of Southern Nevada, including $1,250,000 to the Center for Environmental Studies at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas for these purposes. Funding to the universities will be administered by the Department of Energy through a cooperative agreement.

Amendment No. 37: Provides $5,500,000 for oversight responsibility by the State of Nevada as proposed by the Senate instead of $6,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 38: Provides $7,000,000 for affected local governments of the Nuclear Waste Disposal Fund as proposed by the Senate instead of $8,500,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 39: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides that distribution of funds to local governments shall be determined by the Department of Energy and shall be made available to the state and affected units of local government by direct payment.

ISOTOPE PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION PROGRAM FUND

Amendment No. 40: Deletes language proposed by the House providing funds for the Isotope Production and Distribution Program Fund. Funding for this activity is provided under the Energy Supply, Research and Development Activities appropriation.

ATOMIC ENERGY DEFENSE ACTIVITIES

WEAPONS ACTIVITIES

Amendment No. 41: Appropriates $3,229,069,000 instead of $3,201,369,000 as proposed by the House and $3,251,268,000 as proposed by the Senate, and deletes language proposed by the House directing specific funding levels for inertial confinement fusion program participants.

Inertial confinement fusion

The conferees reiterate concerns expressed by the Senate with respect to the program management of the inertial confinement fusion program within the Department and the continued disregard of committee and congressional direction to fund ongoing activities in a manner which provides for efficient operation and completion of the laser upgrades. Statutory language directing specific funding levels for program participants as proposed by the House has been deleted based on the Department's assurances that congressional concerns will be addressed.

Technology transfer

The conferees have provided the budget request of $215,794,000 for the technology transfer program as proposed by the Senate.

Nevada test site

The transfer of $152,419,000 from testing to research and development for stockpile stewardship is not intended to reduce or otherwise affect the Department's plans to expend funds as originally proposed for experimentation at the Nevada Test Site. The conferees believe that in order to maintain the Nevada Test Site in a cost effective manner, the Department should seek to utilize fully, consistent with national policy, the valuable test, demonstration and operational resources available to the Nevada Test Site.

DEFENSE ENVIRONMENTAL RESTORATION AND WASTE MANAGEMENT

Amendment No. 42: Appropriates $5,092,691,000 instead of $5,128,211,000 as proposed by the House and $5,083,691,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Construction funding of $7,000,000 has been provided for project 95–E–600, the Hazardous Materials Training Center in Richland, Washington.

The conference agreement provides $1,000,000 for the scholarship and fellowship program, and $17,500,000 for the risk assessment initiative.

Waste Isolation Pilot Plant

The conferees have agreed to provide $178,600,000 for the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant.

Program taxes

There are indications that the Department is taxing the defense environmental restoration and waste management program to fund activities both within the program and throughout the Department which were never identified in the budget request. The conferees strongly reiterate their position that program taxes are not to be used to fund activities which were not identified in the budget justification materials presented for Congressional review.

Funding adjustments

The conferees have not accepted the Senate's proposal of a general reduction of $25,000,000 to this account. However, due to the large uncosted funding balances which continue to be maintained, the conferees have increased the use of prior year balances by $9,000,000 for a total of $249,300,000.

Amendment No. 43: Deletes language proposed by the House making funds previously appropriated for the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant available for other purposes.

These funds remain available for disbursement to the State of New Mexico upon compliance with the provision in Public Law 102–104, the Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1992.

MATERIALS SUPPORT AND OTHER DEFENSE PROGRAMS

Amendment No. 44: Appropriates $1,849,657,000 instead of $1,842,204,000 as proposed by the House and $1,865,910,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Fissile Materials Control and Disposition

The conferees agree to provide $50,000,000 for Fissile Materials Control and Disposition, and direct that not less than $15,000,000 of those funds be expended as proposed by the Senate for the application of reactor technologies in the marketplace in such a way as to minimize cost to the government, and to maximize efficiency of the technology, both in terms of producing tritium and for generation of electricity for commercial sale to regional utilities. Further, the Department is directed to submit to the respective subcommittees, within 180 days, a report on the technological feasibility of a multipurpose, light water reactor for the disposition of plutonium and the production of tritium. Such report shall evaluate the impacts of a multipurpose reactor on the cost, schedule and reliability of the programs for both plutonium and tritium production, as well as the extent to which overall program costs can be offset through private financing of the construction, operation and ownership of the facility, and/or the sale of electricity.

The conferees also urge the Department to ensure that adequate funds, in the range of current year levels, be made available to continue the current accelerator production of tritium project and the accelerator-driven transmutation technology to dispose of plutonium.

Naval reactors

The conferees are unable to restore the funding reduction proposed by the House, but have recommended that the $5,000,000 reduction be applied to reactor operation and evaluation rather than reactor development.

Funding adjustments

The conferees have not accepted the Senate's proposal of a general reduction of $18,000,000 to this account. However, due to the large uncosted funding balances which continue to be maintained, the conferees have increased the use of prior year balances by $12,000,000 for a total of $401,406,000.

DEPARTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The conferees agree with the Senate proposed allocation of funding for general management expenses.

Within this appropriation account, funds have been realigned to reflect the correct distribution of salaries and other expenses for the scientific and engineering training and development program and the environmental policy studies program.

POWER MARKETING ADMINISTRATIONS

BONNEVILLE POWER ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 45: Deletes language proposed by the House reducing funds available for obligation in fiscal year 1995 by $485,000.

The conferees support the Senate provision regarding the Bonneville Power Administration's efforts to achieve regional conservation goals. Bonneville should promote these goals while also recognizing the local decisionmaking authority of consumer owned utility systems.

The conferees are aware that the Administration will assume costs of the additional mitigation measures to protect endangered and threatened stocks of salmon in the Columbia and Snake river basins through spill and flow augmentation for 1994 since these additional measures go beyond those called for in the current biological opinion governing the operation of the Federal Columbia River Power System. While there is no objection to the recent decision to provide emergency short-term financial assistance for these expenses, the conferees are concerned that the decision to fund these costs by crediting the Bonneville Power Administration's repayment to Treasury may have broader financial and policy implications. The conferees expect the Department of Energy and the Office of Management and Budget to work with the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations to outline the budgetary principles to be applied if it appears there will be a continuing need for this assistance. The conferees also expect the Administration to work with the Committees on Appropriations to identify the appropriate financing mechanisms to be included in the President's budget.

WESTERN AREA POWER ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 46: Appropriates $222,285,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $224,085,000 as proposed by the House.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HON. LYNN SCHENK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Ms. SCHENK. Mr. Speaker, on Monday I introduced H.R. 4867, the High Speed Rail Development Act of 1994. I am pleased to have been joined in this effort by the distinguished chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee [Mr. DINGELL] and the distinguished chairman of the Transportation Subcommittee [Mr. SWIFT] in introducing this legislation. The legislation passed the Transportation Subcommittee by unanimous vote this morning, and I expect the full Energy and Commerce Committee will take the bill up on Friday.

Mr. Speaker, high-speed rail is an idea whose time has come. H.R. 4867 represents the first commitment in the history of this great Nation to develop and implement a high-speed rail transportation network. Our ultimate goal is the construction of a safe, fast, efficient, and environmentally sound transportation alternative for all Americans. H.R. 4867 establishes the policy framework and takes the first steps toward achieving that goal.

In April of last year, I was proud to be an original cosponsor of the administration's original high-speed rail proposal. That legislation, H.R. 1919, was reported out of the Energy and Commerce committee in late July. Unfortunately, two things became very clear to us in the months following our full committee markup. First, we understood that Congress could not offer funding at the levels specified in the bill. Second, certain provisions relating to reemployment benefits and the application of Davis-Bacon rules drew strong opposition from the States and certain members. For the past several months, I have worked closely with our distinguished committee chair [Mr. DINGELL], our distinguished subcommittee chair [Mr. SWIFT], the Department of Transportation, and the Federal Railroad Administration to resolve these matters and forge a consensus bill. H.R. 4867 is the product of those efforts.

H.R. 4867 authorizes total appropriations of $29,000,000 in fiscal year 1995, $70,000,000 in fiscal year 1996, and $85,000,000 in fiscal year 1997 to the Secretary of Transportation for purposes of carrying out this policy. The legislation has two primary components. Section 26101 of the bill specifies criteria for Federal assistance to States for the purposes of corridor planning. In 1992, the Department of Transportation identified five high-priority high-speed rail corridors—Chicago to St. Louis, Detroit, and Milwaukee; Miami-Orlando-Tampa; San Diego-Los Angeles-San Francisco Bay area and Sacramento via the San Joaquin Valley; Eugene-Portland-Seattle-Vancouver, BC; Washington, DC-Richmond-Raleigh-Charlotte. In addition to these five corridors, the existing New York State high-speed corridor—New York City-Albany-Buffalo—is also eligible for Federal assistance.

Under section 26101, the Federal Government can provide up to 50 percent in matching funds for a variety of corridor activities, including environmental assessments, economic analyses, feasibility studies, preliminary engineering, and the acquisition of rights-of-way. This bill grants the Secretary of Transportation some discretion in determining which corridors receive funding under this section. However, it is our intent that those corridors previously designated by ISTEA be a priority for Federal assistance.

Section 26102 authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to provide funding for the adaptation and integration of developed technologies for commercial application in the United States. This type of commitment to technology development is long overdue. High-speed innovations like maglev and the tilt train are U.S. technologies that have been commercialized and applied overseas.

Furthermore, the aggressive promotion of high-speed technology will ease our conversion from a defense to a civilian economy. Early last year, I asked Gary Denman, the Director of the Advanced Research Projects Agency [ARPA] to consult with the Department of Transportation in making its grants through the Technology Reinvestment Project [TRP], because I believe that transportation is a particularly attractive commercial market for defense companies. In fact, the majority of TRP applications in this past year have been transportation-related.

H.R. 4867 authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to provide financial assistance to private businesses, local governments, or public authorities that seek to develop high-speed rail technologies. The Secretary will coordinate DOT's efforts with other State and Federal agencies, so that high-speed rail technology can augment our existing conversion policies.

What this means is American jobs. It is my hope that this bill will jump-start the efforts of hundreds of defense companies to seek to use their technologies in the commercial transportation markets. If we can lend a hand and help coordinate their efforts, we can help the private sector create thousands of jobs across the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, while this is my first term in the Congress, I am no stranger to the issue of high-speed rail. As a former Secretary of Business, Transportation and Housing in the State of California, I advocated this type of Federal support for high-speed rail over a decade ago. Despite the absence of such support, the State of California has been extremely progressive in pursuing high-speed rail over the past decade; our State has invested more than $1 billion in its rail system since the passage of ISTEA alone. In my home State, the Los Angeles-San Diego corridor has the second-highest ridership in the Nation despite operating under normal rail speeds. A Federal high-speed rail policy will help California and other States continue to make the incremental improvements necessary to realize high-speed rail transportation.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my deep appreciation to both Chairman DINGELL and to Chairman SWIFT for including me in their discussions and deliberations on this issue. They and their excellent staffs have been extremely fair and generous with their time. In particular, I want to commend the chairman of the subcommittee for his tireless leadership on these issues. He is an inspiration to his colleagues, and his impending retirement is the institution's loss. I look forward to working with him in the next few months to pass H.R. 4867 and establish our Nation's first high-speed rail policy.

ARIZONA WINNER, VOICE OF DEMOCRACY, CHESLEY CRANCH

HON. JIM KOLBE

OF ARIZONA

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, each year the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and its ladies' auxiliary sponsor a contest for secondary school students across the Nation. This year, more than 138,000 students competed in the Voice of Democracy broadcast scriptwriting contest, and I am proud to recognize the State winner from Arizona, Ms. Chesley Cranch, a 12th grade student from Safford High School in Safford, AZ.

I am inserting the text of her script so my colleagues can read her inspiring words. Society presents so many challenges for teenagers, and it is encouraging to know there are so many youth, like Chesley, who have bright vision for the future and the desire to give their very best to keep America strong.

MY COMMITMENT TO AMERICA

Commitments to America have been around since before there was an America to commit to. In 1776 a small group of men gathered together and made a commitment to their country in signing a radical statement concerning their independence from Great Britain. These men first stated their beliefs about all men being created equal, about their Creator giving them certain unalienable rights including life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and about a government deriving its powers from the consent of the governed. Then, they pledged or committed their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor in support of those beliefs. From that commitment arose the country called America.

Did these early patriots expect every American after them to have the same dedication as they? I, for one, believe they did. I also believe that most Americans have not lost sight of their responsibilities. That, just below the surface of our fast-paced way of life, there is a love for this country in every citizen just waiting for the chance to show itself when the need arises and the call goes out.

Perhaps the greatest outpouring of patriotism and dedication to the values our country was founded on that I have experienced in my lifetime was during the Desert Storm War in the Middle East. This country got behind our armed forces who went out to secure for some foreign nation the unalienable rights our country was designed to embrace. The President even declared a National Day of Prayer that God would watch over our soldiers going into battle. The outcome of that war marks an accomplishment that this whole country feels proud about.

Other events in my own lifetime that have helped me to form my commitment to America include the striving to attain freedom and democracy as seen in Tiananmen Square in China, in the demolition of the Berlin Wall, and in the break-up of the Communist Republics in Russia. If so many people are giving up so much for what we have in this country, I figure I had better take another look at what I have and what I should do with it.

The Preamble to the Constitution begins with the words, "We the people . . .". To me this means that Americans have the right and responsibility to participate in the democratic process. I see it as my duty to let my representatives know how I feel about the issues on which they are making decisions, not from just an emotional or self-centered point of view, but from an informed and educated perspective. A couple years ago the state government announced that they were going to close our local state park. Our government class researched the topic, came up with some suggestions for alternative funding, and wrote letters to our state legislators. In the end, our park remained open and we felt good that it must have been at least partly to our own involvement.

Another part I intend to play in America in a few months when I turn eighteen is to exercise my right to vote. The signers of the Declaration of Independence made special mention of this when they stated that governments should derive their power from the consent of the governed. I intend to know the candidates running for public office and educate myself about the issues being discussed. Even if my candidate loses, I know my voice will be heard when my vote is counted with the others.

Finally, in looking back at the first American patriots, I was impressed at their faith in God and in the belief that He plays a part in governments by first creating men with "certain unalienable rights," and then instituting governments among men, "to secure these rights." These men, I'm sure, prayed much that they were doing the right thing. This is why I am making it my final commitment to America to pray daily for my country and its leaders, that God would give them the wisdom in every decision that will affect this country and those that live here.

H.W. ROGERS HOSE CO. IS SECOND OLDEST IN STATE

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, research has shown that the H.W. Rogers Hose Co. No. 2 of Hudson is the second oldest volunteer fire company in the State of New York.

Ironically, the title of oldest volunteer fire company is bestowed on another Hudson unit, J.E. Edmonds Hose Co. No. 1, formed 7 months earlier in 1794.

Mr. Speaker, I've always reserved a special place in my heart for volunteer firemen, partially out of a special bias. I was a volunteer fireman myself for over 20 years in my hometown of Queensbury. I know well the sacrifices these volunteers make to provide fire protection in mostly rural areas.

In New York State alone, they save countless lives and billions of dollars worth of property every year. They come from all walks of life, all social classes, all ages, and all economic levels. Frequent attendance at training schools has honed their skills to a professional level. But above all they are marked by a spirit of civic pride and desire to help their neighbors, especially when trouble arises.

And the H.W. Rogers Hose Co. No. 2 has been doing it for 200 years. We could only imagine how many buildings have been saved, and how many lives and livestock rescued by the prompt action of these dedicated volunteers.

Many of you have noted the display of fire helmets in the reception area of my office. That's a tribute to my respect for volunteer firemen. A more official tribute will be paid to H.W. Rogers Hose Co. No. 2 on August 20, along with its sister company, J.W. Edmonds Hose Co. No. 1. This is one exfireman who looks forward to marching with them in their firemen's parade.

In meantime, Mr. Speaker, let us pay our own tribute to H.W. Rogers Hose Co. No. 2 for its two centuries of outstanding fire protection.

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to proudly announce that the old Summerton High School, which is the last remaining of five Clarendon County schools named in the 1950 Briggs versus Elliot lawsuit demanding equal education opportunities for black students, was recently nominated to be placed on the National Register of Historic Places.

Summerton High School was thrust into the national spotlight in 1952, when the Clarendon County case merged with four others across the Nation to become Brown versus Board of Education.

In 1954, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that separate schools for black children and white children were unconstitutional.

Summerton High School is not in use today, but stands as a monument to the courage Summerton residents played in striking down legal segregation in public schools in America.

ON THE RETIREMENT OF KATHLEEN DENSON AND ANN MUELLER

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, few disagree with Woodrow Wilson's assessment that "Congress in session is Congress on public exhibition, whilst Congress in its committee rooms is Congress at work."

And when Congress works in its committee rooms, we depend on able and professional staff like Kathleen Denson and Ann Mueller to help us get the job done. Combined, these two women have spent nearly 60 years serving their country.

Kay began working for our former colleague, John Murphy, in his Staten Island, NY, office in 1969. She and her husband, Joe, and their three children, Michelle, Allison, and Joseph, moved to Washington in 1976 and Kay continued as a case worker in Representative Murphy's District of Columbia office. She has been on the staff of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee since 1981.

As our legislative clerk, Kay has not only maintained the committee's permanent legislative records but fought the often thankless and always uphill battle of attempting to make sure that Members at full committee markups know what's going on. She is the one who takes all the bits and pieces of information that cascade through the doorway in the 24 hours before a markup, puts it in some kind of order, and then presents each Member with a complete and accurate folder of amendments, bills, and everything else we need to make a decision.

After 25 years of Government service, Kay's last day was Friday, July 29. She and Joe—who is also retiring from the Department of Justice—expect to spend a good deal of time relaxing and enjoying their new grandson.

Kay may have 25 years of service, but Ann Mueller has files that are 25 years old. Ann started out in 1960 with the Defense Department at Scott Air Force Base in her home State of Illinois. She served at Yokata Air Base in Japan, and at the Pentagon before coming to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee in 1977.

Until 1992, Ann worked for New York Congressman Mario Biaggi on our Coast Guard and Navigation Subcommittee and then as clerk of the Merchant Marine Subcommittee. To this day, she continues to keep our full committee maritime staff in line and informed.

From our committee's first work on a comprehensive oil spill bill in the 1970's, to the Shipping Act of 1984, to our current maritime reform legislation, Ann has been the constant. She knows what we did, why we did it, how it worked, and, if it didn't work, she often knew why.

Ann is famous for her ability to remember everything. Need that letter we sent to Admiral Shear at Marad in 1983? No problem. Ann not only has it, she can tell you what prompted it, and fax you a copy of the response.

In her retirement, Ann plans to move to the mountains, play golf, and come back to town for long lunches with her many friends.

Kay Denson and Ann Mueller. Two of the unsung, but never unappreciated staff who allow Congress to work in committee.

We couldn't do it without you—but now we'll have to.

On behalf of every Member whose life you two have made easier, I wish you fair winds and following seas as you begin this next voyage.

WHAT ABOUT THE WAR CRIMES TRIBUNAL?

HON. SUSAN MOLINARI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Ms. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address an issue which the administration has not treated with nearly enough seriousness: the U.N. War Crimes Tribunal for Yugoslavia.

The War Crimes Tribunal was organized over 17 months ago to investigate and prosecute perpetrators of war crimes in the Balkan conflict. In that time, not a single case file has been created, not a single defendant named, nor even one investigation completed. Meanwhile evidence of these crimes disappears daily and victims scatter across the globe.

This tragedy in the Balkans has thus far led to 187 mass graves containing as many as 5,000 total bodies—143 grave sites in Bosnia alone. Women and children are still being raped and human rights are violated on a daily basis. Bosnian men and women are publicly humiliated and forced to perform heinous acts before usually being killed or maimed.

These investigations must be conducted immediately, and with vigor, to fulfill the promises our President has made to the helpless victims that these crimes would not go unpunished and that justice would be served. Otherwise, the cycle of violence will likely continue unabated.

Last year, the Congress and the administration provided $3 million in voluntary contributions directly to the U.N. Tribunal in Yugoslavia. I am very disappointed that this year's bill gives no allocation to the tribunal. Rather than offering any specific appropriation, the committee would have the tribunal raid existing State Department or Justice Department accounts for funding. In other words: if you can "rob Peter to pay Paul" for this important project, great.

Mr. Speaker, by failing to fulfill our obligations to prosecute the guilty in Bosnia, we give the go-ahead to genocidal maniacs all over the world that they need not fear action from the United States. We must recognize that all member nations of the United Nations—including our own—bear responsibility for not stopping the war crimes in Bosnia sooner. And we certainly bear the responsibility to make those who organized these heinous acts pay.

I call on the administration to correct this terrible oversight by providing the voluntary contributions, the necessary resources and the strong leadership to successfully prosecute these criminals.

THE CANADIAN HEALTH CARE SYSTEM—THE LOSS OF INDIVIDUAL FREEDOM

HON. JIM KOLBE

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, proponents of a massive Government intervention into our country's health care system often tout the health care system of our neighbors to the north in Canada. The following article by Susan Riggs, a Canadian writer, warns us about the perils of increasing Government intervention in our lives. As we head into the final leg of the health care debate, we would be wise to take Ms. Riggs' words to heart and stop the trend in our country towards curbing individual freedom.

WARNING FROM CANADA: LEARN FROM OUR MISTAKES

(By Susan Riggs)

TORONTO.—An open letter to my American neighbors:

Like you, I woke up today, got dressed and settled down to a steaming brew and the morning newspaper before heading out to work. Unlike you, I read that dozens of my fellow citizens were arrested for carrying copies of the Buffalo News. The newspaper contained information about a trial here that the powers-that-be did not want us to read. It is that simple.

It is now 11:15 p.m. Minutes ago, I turned on the Buffalo television station, hoping to see on my TV what could not reach us through the newspapers. I am now looking at a blank screen. We received about 10 seconds of the trial controversy, and suddenly my screen went blank. A message appeared on the screen explaining that because of the contravention of a ban, the station was prohibiting broadcast of the news. Along with the sign was a high-pitched whistle that sounded like the air-raid sirens the Britons used during World War II.

As I sit here alone, I realize that my blood is running cold at the sound of that whistle.

You must wonder about a country that would deny its own citizens the freedom to read. As a Canadian, I have done a lot of hard thinking about it. I guess the powers have their reasons for the ban. Censorship always has its reasons, but, believe me, when you are on the receiving end of government censorship, no reason amounts to a hill of beans—and that is why I am writing to you.

It is my hope that you will read the Canadian story and, as your famous columnist Ann Landers says, "wake up and smell the coffee"—while you still have a newspaper to read along with it.

I have always loved the United States of America, and I know that you are now making critical decisions about the role of government in your lives. Many years ago, we in Canada were at a crossroads in our decision making that is similar to the one you are at now. I wish our decisions back then had been very different. Then maybe I wouldn't be sitting here staring at a blank screen.

Some two decades ago, Canadians were concerned with how government could best help its citizens. We looked around at countries with a comprehensive social welfare system and envied them their cushions of comfort for everything from universal medical care to national day care.

We were a country that held individual freedom in high esteem. Surely, we thought, it was possible to take the best aspects of socialism and weave them into the fabric of a free society. After all, this was democratic Canada, not the Soviet Union.

Over the next 20 years, we developed an extensive social support network at both the federal and provincial levels of government. The government spent money on every conceivable program. We spent and spent. Still, no one was ever really satisfied.

The spending even now continues unabated, and our national deficit today stands at more than $45 billion. (We are now looking to New Zealand for pointers on how to control our deficit.)

When you adopt an extensive government agenda, you soon discover that all the entrenched programs and layers of bureaucracy become impossible to budge. Much of the population works for the government; about one of every four Canadians now draws a government paycheck.

People learn to depend on government, and all governments, even those whose leaders warn against this dependency, learn to love the power that flows from it.

As for the threat to individual liberty, newspaper censorship is, frankly, the tip of the iceberg. Government intervenes in our lives constantly, and individual liberties are abrogated in new and ever more imaginative ways each day.

Recently, while on vacation, I rented a car in Seattle and tried to drive into British Columbia. My car was confiscated at the border. When I asked for an explanation, I was told that I had not paid taxes on it—a rental car. Had I been an American, there would have been no problem, but, as a Canadian, I had to pay $200 more for a Canadian rental car in order to continue my trip.

Canadians who dare to get a haircut or a car tune-up across the border are being photographed and prosecuted upon their return to Canada. Why? Because they have secured these services without having to incur the 7 percent goods-and-services tax slapped onto our ever-burgeoning provincial taxes. Even insurance plans are now taxed.

Once it takes hold, monopolization by government soon spreads to nearly every aspect of your life; in the Toronto area alone, we have six separate municipal governments and one super-municipal government (the "mother" of all local governments) called Metro, which exists to oversee the others.

You will find that after a time, your state and federal governments—even those of a different political stripe—will join forces to make their task of tax collection easier.

Our entire education system, up to university level, is governed by a centralized bureaucracy called the Ministry of Education, which dictates what can and cannot be taught in the schools and how it is to be taught. Universities are mainly government-funded.

I realize that the issue of government-run programs is particularly important to you now because of the state of your health-care system. I sympathize with you completely. I cannot imagine a world where one could be left bankrupt because of illness. I also think that you are on the right track with your solutions. If anyone can devise a workable system for medical care, it is you.

I suggest that you look upon it as you do your police protection; a guard in place for the physical and mental well-being of your citizens. The real danger in socialized medicine is the attitude of entitlement it engenders.

The stories you have heard about us are largely true. It is not uncommon to pick up a newspaper and read about "The Frightening Wait for Cancer Therapy" here in Ontario, and the situation is no, better in the other provinces. There is a shortage of the most advanced diagnostic technology. Thousands of the health cards that ensure access to medical care have been issued erroneously.

We do wait two hours for an appointment booked weeks in advance. Despite our world-class doctors, many patients can't get treatment in time because of overcrowding. When you are faced with a life-and-death medical situation, you don't mind paying whatever it costs. Under the government-dominated medical system, however, you can't even buy your way in—unless, of course, you go to the United States.

The sound of the air-raid siren on my TV has stopped, at least for now. As the politicians love to say, this is my "defining moment."

Writing is my great love, the part of me that can never be censored. This letter was difficult to write, and no one up here knows that I have written it. All these issues are not just personal; they are professional, too.

I am employed in administration at a prominent Ontario university that has historically enjoyed a high degree of autonomy. Last summer, my president wrote a letter to the staff explaining that the government had expressed an intention to take a more active role in the management of university affairs. He described this as an enormous threat to our autonomy as a free-thinking institution, and in the end the government retreated—for now.

As I sit here tonight, it is simply beyond my comprehension that such a well-intentioned and beloved country as my own could go so far astray so quickly. And it is all the more remarkable that it has taken place without grand conspiracies or intricate plots.

Indeed, most Canadians are as offended by the images of totalitarian government as you are. We shared your joy at the fall of the Berlin Wall and the crumbling of the Soviet bloc; we value freedom. And yet we have fallen into a trap where we are not free.

As with that other well-known road, we traveled this one with the best of intentions.

To those who would dismiss me as an alarmist, I issue this invitation: Read our newspapers, watch our news broadcasters (what is left of them) and see for yourselves. Prove me wrong. I wish you could.

Really think about what it could mean when you hear about a government initiative that sounds too good to be true. Thank God for a free press, even when you find yourself criticizing the media for broadcasting stories that you would rather not hear about. The recent publication ban is not the first one. There are others, and their numbers are growing.

When you make critical decisions about the role of government in your life, please think about me, about this letter and about Canada.

Listen and learn, America. Cup your ear to the wind and hear the blood-chilling wail of the siren whistle as it drifts down across your border. If just one of you reads this letter and pauses, even for a moment, to think about what unchecked government can do, then it has been worth the writing.

I have faith in you, America. Your road is tough and not perfect. Nothing is. Your road will keep leading you to freedom—the freedom to read and think and be exactly who and what you are—if you only let it. Treasure that freedom, love it and resolve never, ever to let it go.

J.W. EDMONDS HOSE CO. CELEBRATES 200 YEARS OF FIGHTING HUDSON FIRES

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, those of you who have visited my office have noticed the display of fire helmets that dominates the reception area. They're there for two reasons.

First, I had the privilege of being a volunteer fireman in my hometown of Queensbury for more than 20 years, which also explains the second reason, the great respect that experience gave me for the volunteers who provide fire protection in our rural areas.

Mr. Speaker, in a rural area like the 22d District of New York, fire protection is often solely in the hands of these volunteer companies. In New York State alone they save countless lives and billions of dollars worth of property. And no unit has been doing it longer than J.W. Edmonds Hose Co. No. 1 of Hudson, NY.

The State of New York has recognized the company as the oldest active, continually volunteer fire company in the State.

Coincidentally, the second oldest unit in New York State is H.W. Rogers Hose Co. No. 2, also of Hudson.

J.W. Edmonds Hose Co. No. 1 was formed in April, 1794, 7 months before H.W. Rogers Hose Co. One wonders how many alarms the company has answered in those 200 years, how many homes saved, and how many human beings and livestock rescued from smoke and flames.

And throughout those 200 years, the company has been made up of volunteers from all social classes and economic levels, from farmers to teachers to grocery clerks. What they have had in common is a desire to help their neighbors. Nothing, Mr. Speaker, is more all-American.

On August 20, a fireman's parade will be held in celebration of those 200 years of service. This is one ex-fireman who hopes to be there to march with them. Today, I would ask all Members to join me in tribute to J.W. Edmonds Hose Co. No. 1 for its two centuries of outstanding fire protection.

MALEA JOHNSON—VOLUNTEER OF THE YEAR

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Malea Johnson, a rising junior at Columbia High School, who recently received the Volunteer of the Year Award from the city of Columbia, SC.

Miss Johnson certainly is a worthy recipient of this award, as she was moved into action to establish a tutorial program for area elementary school students after lamenting the students' low standardized test scores.

Johnson, a cheerleader and member of the student council, found time in her busy school schedule to establish a neighborhood tutorial program that helped approximately 20 first through eighth graders improve their academic performance. She encouraged 10 other students and 3 adults to join her in this worthy endeavor.

Mr. Speaker, Malea Johnson certainly deserves recognition for her initiative and she should be held up as an outstanding example of the character, drive and volunteer spirit embodied in many of our Nation's youths.

TRIBUTE TO THE UNITED STATES COAST GUARD ON ITS 204TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 204th anniversary of the U.S. Coast Guard, our Nation's oldest maritime service. I take personal pleasure in noting Massachusetts' special relationship with the Coast Guard which dates back to the agency's inception. In 1790, Alexander Hamilton, then-Secretary of the Treasury, ordered the commissioning of 10 revenue cutters to assist in the collection of customs duties. The revenue cutter Massachusetts was the largest of the 10 original Coast Guard cutters. Today, Massachusetts fishermen and all other mariners continue to rely on the U.S. Coast Guard to be "Semper Paratus."

Over the past 200 years, the Coast Guard's missions have greatly expanded from its revenue cutter service beginnings. Today, the Coast Guard is charged with maintaining aids to navigation, ensuring the protection of the marine environment from oil and other hazardous spills, interdicting the flow of drugs, enforcing fisheries laws and treaties, and promoting safety at sea. In addition to these peacetime duties, the Coast Guard is a branch of our military and has served with distinction in every U.S. armed conflict.

And the missions keep expanding. Thus far in 1994, the Coast Guard has rescued over 25,000 Haitians from overcrowded boats helplessly adrift in the Caribbean.

The U.S. Coast Guard is the world's premier humanitarian maritime organization. The invaluable service it provides to the American people was clearly illustrated by a letter recently sent to the Coast Guard Commandant, Admiral Robert Kramek, by a grateful citizen.

Writing to thank the Coast Guard for its successful efforts to rescue first a seriously injured crew member and then the boat itself, Mr. Louis Spizziri of Wyckoff, NJ, said:

> Every member of your organization performed in outstanding fashion. They were all most competent in their jobs which they performed in a thoroughly professional manner. I feel that their behavior displayed an extraordinary level of ability and training.

Mr. Spizziri vividly described the June 27, 1994, rescue of the badly injured owner of the sloop Kanoa Kai by a USCG HH 60 J Jayhawk helicopter 200 miles east of the entrance to the Chesapeake Bay. The following day, the remaining crew encountered a violent thunderstorm that knocked the boat flat four times in the space of only 10 minutes and set off the engine alarm. The Coast Guard cutter Aquidneck sent two crewmen to help but were unable to solve the problem and the cutter ended up towing the boat to Little Creek, VA.

Mr. Spizziri closed his letter to Admiral Kramek by saying,

> I know I speak for the owner and the other two crew members of the Kanoa Kai thanking all the many people who participated in the rescue operations and commending them for their outstanding abilities and dedication to service. Some of them as you well know literally put their own lives at risk. The Coast Guard certainly lived up to its mission of saving lives and performing rescue.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who work with the Coast Guard know that events like those described by Mr. Spizziri are a daily occurrence. The resourceful and courageous men and women who serve in the Coast Guard are to be applauded and there is no better time to recognize their often heroic efforts then on today, their 204th anniversary.

TRIBUTE TO ADELAIDE KASSENBROCK

HON. SUSAN MOLINARI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Ms. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with great pride in a member of my district. Adelaide Kassenbrock has been recognized as the Bay Ridge Community Council Civic Award winner. She has received this award for her outstanding and relentless dedication in serving the Bay Ridge community for over 50 years.

As a registered nurse during World War II, Adelaide Kassenbrock worked as a volunteer for the American Red Cross. Following her retirement, she continued to be a volunteer for many years at the Goldwater Hospital on Roosevelt Island. For over 30 years, Adelaide Kassenbrock has participated in many activities and served on every committee as a member of the Bay Ridge Community Council. She has been the vice president, recording secretary, corresponding secretary and historian. She is a founding member of the Kassenbrock Brothers Memorial Scholarship Fund, an organization of vital importance in Bay Ridge because it raises thousands of dollars in scholarship aid each year for needy high school seniors.

Adelaide Kassenbrock's accomplishments and contributions compare second to none. She has been the president of the Women's Guild of the Lutheran Medical Center and served as secretary in the Bay Ridge Nursery. As a founding member of the Bay Ridge Mental Health Council, she currently serves as the corresponding secretary. I could go on and on about the wonderful service Adelaide Kassenbrock has provided to Bay Ridge. I am proud to have Adelaide Kassenbrock as a constituent. Her devotion to Bay Ridge is simply unequaled.

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today, the U.S. Coast Guard celebrates its 204th birthday—and Americans honor the courage, patriotism and professionalism of the men and women who formerly served and who currently serve as members of the Coast Guard.

As the ranking Republican member of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, I have been impressed that Coast Guard members have carried out, and continue to carry out, their many varied responsibilities with quiet dedication, honor and courage. I have been equally impressed with the concern that Coast Guard personnel demonstrate on a daily basis not only for the well-being of their fellow man, but for the well-being and protection of our marine environment as well.

This has been a busy, and difficult, year for the men and women of the Coast Guard. The audible alarm that notifies Coast Guard personnel when an individual is in distress and needs assistance has sounded at a record pace this year. As that alarm has sounded, the Coast Guard has responded quickly, completely, competently and compassionately.

This year, the alarm has sounded for the humanitarian rescue of record numbers of refugees from Haiti and Cuba.

The alarm has sounded for the continued vigorous enforcement of our Nation's fisheries laws—particularly in areas that are being dangerously overfished.

The alarm has sounded for ice-breaking assistance during one of our Nation's worst winters on record.

The alarm has sounded when pollution has threatened our Nation's coastlines—and when the Coast Guard's considerable expertise and rapid response was needed to avert several major environmental disasters.

The alarm has sounded—and it has sounded an average of 144 times each and every day of the year, Mr. Speaker—for search and rescue missions, as boaters, swimmers, surfers and others have found themselves in emergency, life-threatening situations.

The alarm has sounded when the Coast Guard's assistance was needed for drug interdiction, for vessel inspection, and to service aids to navigation.

On July 12 and July 13 of this year, an another alarm sounded—an alarm that none of us hopes we will ever have to hear again. It was an alarm informing us that six Coast Guard personnel had been killed in the line of duty, in service to their country, in two separate incidents in California and over the Gulf of Mexico. Those two tragic incidents reminded Coast Guard personnel that their work is not without risk—and reminded all Americans of the invaluable service Coast Guard personnel perform on a daily basis despite the risks involved. We extend our condolences to the families and loved ones of the six men killed last month, and we pray for the safety and well-being of those Coast Guard personnel on whom so many Americans continue to depend.

Tragedies such as occurred in July might cause some people to become hesitant, tentative, and more concerned about their own safety than about the safety of others—but not the men and women of the U.S. Coast Guard.

Despite these tragic reminders of their own mortality, and with a solemn nod to the sometimes life-threatening nature of their chosen career, the men and women of the U.S. Coast Guard continue to answer the call whenever, and wherever, the alarm for help sounds. With renewed resolve to honor the memory of their fellow "Coasties" who died last month, and those who have given their lives to save others during the 204-year history of the U.S. Coast Guard, the men and women of the Coast Guard continue to live up to words of their song, Semper Paratus: "We're always ready for the call. We place our trust in Thee. Through surf and storm and howling gale, high shall our purpose be."

CLINTON-GEPHARDT BILL: MORE GOVERNMENT, LESS QUALITY

HON. RON PACKARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, the Clinton-Gephardt bill now before Congress represents everything that Americans dislike about Washington—a huge, intrusive, government, one-size fits all approach which limits choice, threatens quality, and increases cost.

The Clinton-Gephardt bill sets up a huge bureaucracy with the power to regulate the entire health care system. This plan will force the American people to spend their health care dollars on 50,000 new bureaucrats responsible for making decisions about their health care.

And what can the American people look forward to when this complex system of price controls is introduced—rationing. To see rationing at work, one must only look at another government-run experiment in health care, the local VA hospital. Even at the best VA facilities, patients who need special care like heart or orthopedic procedures must wait 60 to 90 days to see a specialist and then months more for needed surgery or treatments.

Routine care also suffers. Over half such patients, reports GAO, wait 1 to 3 hours to be seen briefly by a doctor burdened with increasing numbers of patients and piles of Government forms. Little wonder that 90 percent of the Nations 27 million veterans turn to private hospitals rather than the free VA facilities.

Imagine what it would be like if all Americans had the choice of rationed care in a government-run system.

Mr. Speaker, we need to institute health care reform which ensures the kind of quality and choice the American people deserve.

TRIBUTE TO SANDY CHRISTOFFERSON

HON. JAMES T. WALSH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my deepest concern and regard for Sandy Christofferson, a resident of Cortlandville, NY. Sandy has faced more adversity and pain in the last month than most of us experience in a lifetime.

Last month, Sandy and her husband, Doug, were excitedly preparing for a vacation to celebrate their 29th anniversary, when Sandy fell ill and lost feeling in her legs. Following a 911 call and a stay in the intensive care unit of a Syracuse hospital, Sandy was diagnosed as having an embolism, or blood clot. Though doctors are still unsure as to exactly what happened to Sandy, the blood clots had cut the supply of blood to her legs. Eventually, both her legs were amputated above the knee. While she must still go into the operating room every other day, the doctors have discovered that the embolisms are dissolving and Sandy may be able to leave the hospital later this month.

Throughout this entire ordeal, Sandy and her family have maintained a positive outlook. Rather than despairing over what has been lost, Sandy rejoices in life and what she has: a loving husband, devoted children, and beautiful grandchildren.

In addition, Sandy has the support and love of the Cortland community. She has spent years working in the area and on behalf of its residents. Most of Sandy's time and energy has always been focused on children, her own and the community's. She worked as a maternity ward nurse in the Cortland Memorial Hospital and as a nurse for McGraw Central School. She has been a 4-H volunteer for over 17 years, and was employed as a 4-H program assistant focusing on animal science for 6 years. Recently she became a health services facilitator for the Cortland County Head Start Program. Sandy has dedicated an enormous amount of time over the years toward helping young people achieve success. I hope she will continue to laugh and cry along with the children she has always loved.

Peers and coworkers have started a collection to help the Christoffersons defray medical expenses, and community members have donated wholeheartedly. Residents and visitors have signed two extra-large cards expressing their prayers. It is very clear to all that Sandy is beloved in her community.

Mr. Speaker, I am extremely proud to recognize Sandy Christofferson, her family, and the Cortland community. I hope my colleagues join me in praying for her continued recovery.

COMMUNITY RATING: AN ISSUE THAT HAS BEEN OVERLOOKED

HON. CASS BALLENGER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, there is one aspect of the health care debate that seems to have been overlooked: the community rating system for individual health insurance purchasers. Community rating raises the rates of younger people, while it lowers the rates of those aged 45 to 54 years, in order to make paying for health insurance more equitable. This policy would take $40 billion out of the pockets of people under the age of 35. The average median income of this group has fallen 15 percent in the last two decades. This group needs a tax break, not an increase.

A strict community rating system, as proposed by the Clinton health care plan and the other Democratic health care plans, forces individuals at lower risk of developing serious medical problems to pay for those who are at greater risk. The risks related to age would call for a premium 3.5 to 4.5 times as high for a 50-year-old as for a 25-year-old. Community rating would roughly double the cost of health insurance for the young, while cutting in half the rate for middle-aged Americans. Median annual income for a worker aged 25 or under is $18,313; while that number is $43,751 for a worker aged 45 to 54. Yet, some people believe that these two groups should pay the same amount for health insurance. The people in their mid-thirties are the least insured group in the country already. Clearly, doubling the insurance premium for this group will not increase the number of policyholders.

Mr. Speaker, if you want a health care plan that provides universal coverage for all, community rating is not the way to go. By raising the price of insurance for those under the age of 35, you give them a disincentive to purchase health insurance. In New York, the cost of insurance for a single male rose 170 percent after the State implemented this policy of community rating. Since adults in their mid-thirties are already the least insured group. They need to be encouraged to purchase insurance, not discouraged. By doubling the price of health insurance for this age group, the number of uninsured is bound to increase. Community rating is a bad idea which begs for bad results.

DR. JAMES BLAKE HONORED WITH STREET NAMING

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. James Blake of Marion, SC, for his many years of community and professional service.

The city of Marion recently honored Dr. Blake, a former educator, with the unveiling of a street sign bearing his name. In 1993, the city of Marion named the unpaved road—running through a new 30-unit housing project off Martin Luther King Drive—Blake Circle, recognizing Dr. Blake for his 27 years of work as a member of the Marion Housing Authority.

Dr. Blake is also a retired assistant superintendent of Marion County District 1 and math supervisor.

Dr. Blake was accompanied at the unveiling by his wife, Rita; children Karen, James Jr., Albert, William, and Kevin; and grandchildren Tre' and Tyler Blake, who unveiled the sign.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Blake is a friend of long standing and his family, friends, and professional and community associates can certainly testify to the fact that he is deserving of this honor.

CONGRATULATING EAGLE SCOUT TODD K. RIELAGE

HON. DAVID MANN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity today to congratulate Todd Rielage on his accomplishment of earning the rank of Eagle Scout. This is a substantial achievement demonstrating Todd's perseverance, as only 2 percent of all Scouts even attain the Eagle rank. Todd joins his older brothers, Dale and Keith, as an Eagle Scout from Troop 828, sponsored by Groesbeck United Methodist Church.

Todd is an eighth grade honor roll student at Colerain Middle School. He is the accomplished first clarinet in the school band and covers home plate for the Walt Sweeney select baseball team.

I extend my heartiest congratulations to Todd Rielage who should be justifiably proud of his accomplishments. I also extend congratulations to his parents, Robert and Diana Rielage, and his adult Scout leaders whose support and encouragement helped make his goal a reality.

TRIBUTE TO SULTAN AHMAD

HON. THOMAS M. FOGLIETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate my good friend Sultan Ahmad on the occasion of his promotion to deputy director of operations at the Philadelphia Parking Authority. Sultan comes to his new position from the mayor's Office of Community Services where he served as the agency's executive director.

Sultan's prior position entailed coordinating programs to address issues of homelessness, housing, youth violence, nutrition, unemployment, economics, and illiteracy in the city of Philadelphia. Last year, over 100,000 citizens were affected by the agency's services. In addition, he established the Sultan Jihad Ahmad Scholarship Fund which grants scholarships to deserving college students and grants to worthy organizations. This fund was formed by Sultan in loving memory of his son, a high school student who died tragically in a shooting death. Sultan has been a leader in promoting respect, dedication, and faith in people of all ages.

In recognition of his leadership and commitment to the community, he will be honored by the staff of the Office of Community Services with a celebration dinner on Wednesday, August 10, 1994, in Philadelphia. Mr. Speaker, I join with friends and family in recognizing Sultan Ahmad's accomplishments and wishing him the best of luck in his new endeavors with the Philadelphia Parking Authority.

THE DAD-FINDER ACT OF 1994 AND THE CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1994

HON. JIM COOPER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, most of us agree that the current welfare system desperately needs fixing. Taxpayers are fed up with paying for it, and even people on welfare realize that they are being trapped in a cycle of dependency—sometimes for two and three generations. Unfortunately, many of us fear that partisan gridlock will keep comprehensive welfare reform from being passed by this Congress.

The American people have told us that we have to do something about welfare. And we have to do it now. That's why I am proposing measures which will help fix a significant problem within our welfare system—child support.

I have met too many women in my home State of Tennessee who have been forced onto welfare because the fathers of their children do not pay child support. Many times, the father has never been identified. Other times, the father has tried to escape his obligations. As a result, the American taxpayer, through the welfare system, has to come up with the child support payments for these children.

I have introduced two separate bills that would help tackle these problems while saving taxpayers billions of dollars. The first bill is the Dad Finder Act of 1994. This measure would help identify fathers of children born out of wedlock by encouraging paternal identification programs both before and at the time of birth and by cutting off welfare benefits where fathers have not been identified.

The second bill is the Child Support Enforcement Act of 1994. This bill would crack down on deadbeat dads by authorizing the seizure of their bank accounts, property, and even gambling winnings, and restricting their ability to obtain credit or professional and drivers' licenses. This measure would also make grandparents financially responsible for their grandchildren when the children's parents cannot or will not make child support payments.

There is nothing revolutionary about either of these measures. In fact, many of these provisions can be found in welfare reform proposals already introduced by both Democrats and Republicans. However, these are ideas whose time has come. I urge my colleagues to support this profamily legislation.

SALUTE TO JERRY ENOMOTO

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to rise today to salute Mr. Jerry Enomoto, the first Japanese-American United States marshal.

I have known Jerry Enomoto personally and professionally for many years and I count him among my best friends and most respected colleagues. Given Mr. Enomoto's outstanding career in law enforcement and corrections, I can think of no other person more deserving of his new position with the Marshal Service.

A trailblazer in many ways, Mr. Enomoto's unparalleled job performance has resulted in him accomplishing many firsts. He was the first Japanese-American to break into numerous positions, including first Japanese-American to be appointed warden of a prison in the mainland United States; first Japanese-American director of a department of California's State government; and now he has the distinction of being our Nation's first Japanese-American United States marshal.

Mr. Enomoto graduated from the University of California, Berkeley in 1949 and returned to earn a master's degree in social welfare in 1951. In the more than 40 years that have passed since then, he has developed a critically acclaimed career out of a desire to better California's system of corrections.

His outstanding success within the California Department of Corrections has been widely recognized through honors, awards, and commendations too numerous to mention. In addition to his great legacy to the department of corrections, Jerry has inspired by example countless individuals to become involved in community work.

In addition to his more than 40 years of service to the Japanese-American Citizens League, Mr. Enomoto has served the Lions Club and has been an active member of several boards including Visions. Inc.—a mental health agency—Friends Outside, and the Asian Legal Service Outreach. For over 25 years he has been a committed and valued member of the Democratic Party and he is also an elder in the First Community Presbyterian Church of Sacramento. In short, he is a community leader we all would do well to emulate.

IN HONOR OF THE HUMANITARIAN EFFORTS OF THE HERRIN PRAIRIE AMERICAN LEGION POST NO. 645

HON. GLENN POSHARD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the members of the Herrin Prairie American Legion Post No. 645 for their compassionate efforts in aiding the victims of the 1993 Illinois floods. The Legionaires and auxiliary members of Post No. 645 in their humanitarian efforts are an example to us all, and they should be commended for their unselfish generosity.

The Herrin Prairie post, along with other local American Legion posts, gave not only from their pocketbooks, but most generously from their hearts. During the floods, members of the post assisted flood victims by providing them with much needed food, clothing, and toys. Several members also assisted in efforts to sandbag flood threatened areas.

I highly commend the members of Herrin Prairie Post No. 645 for their gallant hours of service to such a devastated region of Illinois. Their heartfelt commitment will forever be remembered by those families whose communities and lives they helped to rebuild. I want to especially commend our departed comrade, Terry Umdenstock, for the leadership that he brought to this great endeavor. Terry is greatly missed by those of us who loved him as well as the many unfortunate people he served over the years.

HONORING HELEN F. CHAVEZ FOR HER UNWAVERING COMMITMENT TO THE UNITED FARM WORKERS UNION

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Helen F. Chavez, the beloved wife of the late civil rights labor leader, Cesar Chavez. On August 8, 1994, Cesar Chavez will posthumously receive the Presidential Medal of Freedom. Helen will receive the award on his behalf and on the behalf of all the farm workers she and Cesar have fought for all their lives.

The Presidential Medal of Freedom is the country's highest civilian honor. Recipients have demonstrated the highest ideals of their fellow citizens. Cesar Chavez dedicated his life to improving the working conditions for thousands of individuals who pick the crops which feed America. Cesar not only founded the United Farm Workers Union, but he left a legacy that we can all identify with and benefit from, his doctrine of nonviolence.

Always beside Cesar was his supporting wife, Helen, often overshadowed on the limelight but never eclipsed. The daughter of Mexican farm workers, Helen was born on January 21, 1928, in Brawley, CA. Her parents had seven children and were farm workers until the days of their deaths. It was in Brawley that she began her life's journey with farm workers. And it is in these fields where she labored that she met her partner for life, Cesar Chavez.

Married on October 22, 1948, in Delano, CA, she and Cesar not only committed their lives to each other, but also to fight for better conditions for the farm workers of California's Central Valley. Having both labored in the fields since their childhood, they knew the day-to-day struggles of the farm workers all too well.

In 1965, Cesar started organizing support for a farm workers union. One of the benefits union members could receive is to belong to a credit union. In 1967, Cesar passed the torch to Helen to run the credit union. Helen had no formal accounting or banking training, but nonetheless taught herself how to manage an efficient credit union. The credit union offered stability to these laborers since they could save money, collect interest, and take out loans at a low interest rate. Most farm workers do not earn enough money to take out loans and to lead stable lifestyles because of their constant movement. Under Helen's leadership, though, the membership not only grew from 7 members to 2,100 at its height, the farm workers had a chance to invest in a better tomorrow.

In addition to her commitment to the credit union and her work in the fields, Helen also raised 8 children, Fernando, Sylvia, Linda, Eloise, Anna, Paul, Elizabeth, and Anthony, 29 grandchildren, and 2 great-grandchildren. They lived in humble settings, and she credits her children as being good soldiers in the fight for justice for all.

Since Cesar's death in April 1993, Helen and her children have not relented in the fight for better working conditions for farm laborers, but more importantly, for justice for all who suffer at the hands of injustice.

All political leaders have power. But, true power emanates from deep within the individual. The silent spirit of Helen Chavez has called us all to hear the simple message of two farm workers, "Don't be afraid. Stay strong. And keep fighting for equality and dignity."

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to a strong woman we can all learn from, Helen F. Chavez.

TRIBUTE TO JOE OLDMIXON

HON. EARL HUTTO

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, on July 28, 1994, Escambia County, FL, lost one of its most outstanding citizens with the passing of Joe Oldmixon. Joe was, without doubt, one of the most loved and respected public officials in history in northwest Florida.

Joe Oldmixon was the longest serving supervisor of elections in Florida. He had served as Escambia County Supervisor of Elections for 41 years. As an indication of the esteem in which he was held. Joe had no opposition after he was first elected to the position in 1952. Election after election no one dared to challenge Joe Oldmixon—a remarkable record.

Joe was a politician who proved that politics does not have to be a dirty word. Young people would do well to emulate the outstanding example of Joe Oldmixon.

Brenda Renfroe, assistant supervisor, said of Joe, "He always preached to us to treat everyone like you'd like to be treated. That was the number one requirement for working here."

Joe Oldmixon, indeed, treated everyone fairly and decently. He and his fine staff have done an excellent job of running elections in Escambia County by registering voters and encouraging people to vote.

Both Joe and his lovely wife, Jeanie, have used wheelchairs since early in life. But there was never a complaint by either as they served the people of our area. Honesty, integrity, trustworthiness, and many other good qualities endeared Joe to thousands of people and he was known and admired by many throughout the State.

Joe was a devout Christian and it was my good fortune to be involved with him and Jeanie several years ago in the Fellowship of Christian Politicians.

Joe will be greatly missed by Jeanie and the family and all of us. But, he will not be forgotten and his legacy sets a high standard that will continue to give us inspiration.

HARRY, WE WISH YOU WELL

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. BARCIA of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call attention to the career of an individual who has been extremely important to many of my constituents, and who has played a significant role of the economic well-being of the many dry bean producers and shippers that I represent.

Harry H. McClintic is retiring after 44 years with Stokley-Van Camp, Inc., and Quakers Oats Co. He is being honored by the Michigan Bean Shippers Association for his professional achievements during his outstanding career. He has been a major player in the purchase of dry beans that are produced in Michigan, particularly in my congressional district. He is known by many as a very knowledgeable, articulate, and skillful businessman who is both a shrewd bargainer and a most pleasant individual with whom one would want to spend a great deal of time.

Through his professional skills he helps bring consumers throughout the United States a quality product that is getting most deserved attention to its positive role in good nutrition. He has left his capable mark on the buyers he has trained, making his impression felt on an even wider part of our country.

He has been welcomed in Michigan as an arbitrator, and as a processor member of the Michigan Bean Commission. He has been welcomed as a business partner, and perhaps most importantly, he has been welcomed as a friend.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who have had the good fortune to get to know Harry and his wife, Marilee, want to wish them every happiness and success as they together move on to new challenges. Their friends in Illinois will be happy to see them more, and their friends in Michigan, including myself and Congressman CAMP who joins me in recognizing his accomplishments, will miss them. We hope that they will return to Michigan time and time again and consider our home State their second home.

TRIBUTE TO CARLO MONTEZ CLARK

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce a citizen of the 12th Congressional District who will be honored by the President of the United States and the Attorney General for his courage and bravery to the Members of this body. Mr. Carlo Montez Clark, a resident of Belleville, IL, will receive the Young American Medal for Bravery for his actions rescuing a woman from a dangerous fire.

On August 23, 1992, Mr. Clark was walking past a grocery store and noticed smoke coming from an apartment building. Mr. Clark made many attempts to enter the apartment, but finally crawled on his hands and knees to enter the place of residence. Once inside, he discovered Ms. Virginia Hudecek on the floor and had to carry her out on his back. This destructive fire caused extensive damage to Ms. Hudecek's apartment. Without Carlo's valor and tenacity, Ms. Hudecek's life could have been lost.

Because of Carlo's heroism, he has been the recipient of many awards and acclamations, including the Carnegie Medal from the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission, the 1992 Humanitarian Award, and is the youngest citizen to receive the Southern Illinois Law Enforcement Commission Award. Mr. Speaker, as a former law enforcement official, I too, know that acts of bravery by citizens of the community are necessary for the protection for all citizens.

Currently, Carlo is completing his degree in mathematics at Western Illinois University in Macomb. With his generous and caring attitude toward his community, he will have an excellent future ahead of him. Mr. Speaker, I wish him a hearty thanks and a successful career.

THE PIKE COUNTY FARM BUREAU: 75 YEARS OF PROGRESS

HON. RICHARD J. DURBIN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and congratulate the Pike County Farm Bureau on the occasion of its 75th anniversary.

I have the pleasure of representing Illinois' 20th Congressional District, which includes Pike County. Located in west-central Illinois, Pike County is home to rich farmland that consistently produces abundant harvests of corn and soybeans, as well as a number of quality pork production operations. The 2,400 members of the Pike County Farm Bureau certainly play a vital role in the economic well-being of agriculture and the quality of farm family life in the county.

Since 1919, members of the Farm Bureau have joined together to provide a respected voice for the men and women who are involved in agriculture production in Pike County. Members continue to strive to bring common sense to the wetlands issue, protect private property rights, and work with local, State, and Federal Governments to ensure that the interests of farmers are represented. Since coming to Congress in 1983, I have had numerous opportunities to meet with this organization and to work on issues of importance to its members. The Pike County Farm Bureau is without a doubt organized and dedicated to providing its members with a strong voice and active representation.

Mr. Speaker, just over a year ago, the Pike County Farm Bureau helped fight the raging Mississippi River flood waters that threatened not only agricultural lands, but small towns in the county as well. Unfortunately, flood waters broke through a portion of the Sny Island levee and destroyed thousands of acres of cropland and hundreds of homes. The Farm Bureau's valiant fight to save the levee, coupled with its subsequent flood recovery effort, helped secure the organization and its members a place in the hearts of county residents and flood victims throughout the Midwest.

I salute the Pike County Farm Bureau, its membership and leaders, for 75 years of progress for American agriculture. I look forward to working with the Farm Bureau for many more years.

THE BATTLE OF THE BULGE 50-YEAR ANNIVERSARY

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise here today to commemorate the men and women of the U.S. Army and to pay special tribute to the members of the 196th Field Artillery. The 196th Field Artillery was formed at Fort Jackson, SC, when the 115th FA separated, sending half to Iceland and leaving half to form the new division. The 196th Field Artillery provided support for the Allied Forces at the Normandy beachhead and remained in France throughout some of the bloodiest battles of the war. The troops of the 196th were also the first to enter Paris and helped in its liberation from Germany, resulting in five battle stars and the Arrowhead Badge.

Mr. Speaker, as we approach the 50th anniversary of The Battle of the Bulge, where many of these men fought and lost their lives, I would like to offer my personal thanks and admiration to these men who fought so courageously in the pursuit of freedom. Because of these men and their sacrifices, Western Europe remains democratic and economically stable.

Since 1968 these men have had a reunion with the inaugural year involving 7 men and since grown to over 100 attendees. There are 24 States represented at this reunion by people who have helped provide a better life for all Americans.

Today I join with the citizens in my district in saluting these men for their courage, dedication, and accomplishments. May God bless them with health and happiness in the years to come.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN MURREN

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to honor one of my constituents, Mr. John Murren, who has contributed 50 years of volunteer fire service in Adams County, PA.

Throughout his 50 years of service Mr. Murren has protected the lives of many people and has rescued many homes. He has contributed over 10,000 hours of volunteer services, traveled more than 80,000 miles, and investigated at least 2,750 fires. With all of his great achievements and qualifications he became president of the Adams County Volunteer Firemen's Association. All too often volunteers receive only the personal satisfaction for their acts. Mr. Murren deserves recognition for his outstanding accomplishments as well.

There are approximately 6,000 deaths and $10 billion worth of property damage annually as a result of fire. Each year, more than 100 firefighters are killed in the line of duty. Today, we as a Nation are indebted to 1.3 million volunteers and 450,000 paid firefighters in the United States.

Community volunteers play a vital role in the development and betterment of our communities. It is often the local volunteer firefighters and veterans organizations who organize the Fourth of July ceremonies every year. It is almost always the firefighters who are first to organize and work tirelessly in search parties for lost children.

Mr. Speaker, the true fabric of our Nation is made of Americans like John Murren who devoted tireless efforts to the service of others. I would personally like to thank Mr. Murren and let him know that his years of service are very much appreciated by the citizens of Adams County.

TRIBUTE TO AMEDEO FIORINDO GONELLA

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Amedeo Fiorindo (Floyd) Gonella—beloved husband, devoted father, and adored grandfather—who passed away last week in Daly City, CA. Having known this good man and his extraordinary family, I know he will be sorely missed. But I also know that his contributions to the community and the legacy of his devotion to family will endure for generations to come.

Floyd Gonella first came to the United States as a teenager, arriving alone at Ellis Island and eventually settling in San Mateo County. He had learned farming in Italy and became a cabbage rancher in California and then a gardener for Daly City. He loved growing, and continued to garden well after he retired. Floyd Gonella and his wife Tina raised two exceptional sons, Floyd and Raymond, and were blessed with six grandchildren.

Floyd will be fondly remembered by his family friends at the Lincoln Park Senior Center, where he spent countless hours playing his bocci, listening to music, dancing, and celebrating all forms of Italian culture. He truly loved people and went out of his way to help others. He was known and admired by his peers at Lincoln Park as a kind, gracious, and gentle man.

Mr. Speaker, Floyd Gonella was one of the finest individuals I have ever had the privilege to know and his passing is a great loss for his family and friends and our entire community. I ask my colleagues to join me at this time in paying tribute to him and the life of purpose he led, and in extending our deepest sympathies to the family he loved so much.

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to proudly announce that the 128-year-old Trinity United Methodist Church in Orangeburg, SC, is one of several Sixth District sites recently nominated to be placed on the National Register of Historic Places.

Trinity Church is significant for its historic service in the African-American community and for its 20th century Gothic revival architecture. The church was organized in 1866 by newly freed slaves. The existing church at 185 Boulevard NE is the fourth sanctuary to serve the congregation.

Construction on the existing church began in 1928 and was designed by African-American architect William W. Wilkins.

The Rev. George F. Manigo is pastor of the historic church and H.B. Pasley is chairman of the board of trustees.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased this church is being recognized for its historical significance in African-American history.

HONORING COAST GUARD CUTTER MACKINAW'S 50 YEARS OF SERVICE

HON. BART STUPAK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a piece of history which sails the Great Lakes and which is stationed in the First Congressional District of Michigan, which I represent. I am here today to honor the Coast Guard cutter Mackinaw's 50 years of service to the State of Michigan and to America.

The cutter Mackinaw was commissioned on December 20, 1944, in Toledo, OH. At 290 feet long, the Mackinaw is the largest and most powerful Coast Guard ship on the Great Lakes.

Throughout the last 50 years the cutter Mackinaw, affectionately known as Big Mack or Queen of the Lakes, has been a driving force behind the economic growth of Michigan and America. Tirelessly toiling during the bitter winter months, Big Mack and her crew have ensured the safe passage of tankers through the icy waters of the Great Lakes. In the 1940's the cutter Mackinaw kept the shipping lanes open, allowing America's mighty war machine to continue its high level of production. Since World War II, the cutter Mackinaw has ensured the safe arrival of vital raw materials for the steel and auto industries of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan. The Big

The cutter Mackinaw has not only helped save the economy, but has also saved lives as well. On numerous occasions the Big Mack and her crew have braved the icy waters to save wayward boaters. A vital part of the Coast Guard's search and rescue missions, I am sure there are more than a few sailors and their families who are eternally grateful to the cutter Mackinaw and her crew.

Over the years, the Mackinaw has been a friend to many. Trustworthy and dependable, she has performed her duties without question.

Today, we are recognizing the cutter Mackinaw for its 50 years of service. This would not be possible, however, if it were not for the dedication and loyalty her crewmembers have displayed over the years. As the Mackinaw celebrates its 50 years of service, I ask the crew to join and celebrate their tireless dedication to the Mackinaw, to Michigan, and to America.

Mr. Speaker, the cutter Mackinaw, and her numerous crewmembers over the years, rarely receive the gratitude they deserve. Together they have embodied the spirit and dedication that has made America the great Nation it is today. I would like to thank the U.S. Coast Guard cutter Mackinaw and everyone who has served on her in the Great Lakes over the last 50 years. Congratulations, and best wishes.

U.S. COAST GUARD'S 204TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, today is the 204th anniversary of the founding of the U.S. Revenue Cutter Service, the predecessor of the U.S. Coast Guard. At the time of its inception in 1790, the Revenue Cutter Service began with the authorization to operate 10 revenue cutters. Since then, through periods of war and peace, the Coast Guard has held a proud place in history. The 30 battle streamers awarded to the Coast Guard honor the service's involvement in every major war of the Nation, including Vietnam and the Grenada expedition. They exhibit the proud history of this, the oldest continuous seagoing service.

The many missions successfully undertaken by the Coast Guard over the last 204 years, clearly demonstrate how this small but valuable group of men and women have served our Nation. Under the current leadership of Adm. Robert E. Kramek, I am confident the Coast Guard will continue to serve as the premiere protector of life and property at sea. The Coast Guard's ongoing commitment to excellence is most clearly evidenced in its response to the recent surge of migrant rescues. Regardless of our views on the policy on Haitian migrants, all surely agree that the Coast Guard has done a remarkable job in protecting lives and providing essential humanitarian assistance to these frightened refugees. In addition, the Coast Guard continues without interruption—daily search and rescue missions, ongoing drug interdiction initiatives, environmental response efforts, waterways management, and defense operations. Each of these mission areas provides essential services to our taxpayers.

It is a pleasure to offer my congratulations and commend the Coast Guard on a job well done and to honor the Coast Guard for 204 years of dedicated service.

INTRODUCTION OF THE FIREARMS SAFETY AND VIOLENCE PREVENTION ACT

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 4, 1994

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce the Firearms Safety and Violence Prevention Act. This legislation would grant the Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms [ATF] broad authority to regulate the design, manufacture, distribution, and performance of firearms and ammunition for the promotion of public health and safety.

Currently, ATF aggressively monitors illegal commerce in firearms. Its sole mission is to promote criminal justice. However, firearms not only pose a criminal threat, but also pose a significantly high risk to public health. It therefore is important that ATF also be vested with the mission to promote public health and prevent violence, particularly since none of the agencies with public health missions has the expertise necessary to regulate firearms.

Because of ATF's exclusive focus on criminal justice, the gun industry has always enjoyed a complete lack of regulation. For example, while some firearm manufacturers equip their products with trigger arrestors or loading indicators, they are not required to do so.

In contrast, the Consumer Product Safety Commission [CPSC] in 1988 banned worm probes which use electrical charges to drive worms from the ground after 28 people died as a result of using them. Twenty eight people is a far cry from the 37,000 people who are killed by guns each year, yet ATF does not have the authority to issue gun regulations to ensure consumer safety.

Moreover, it is shocking and ironic that children's toys are more strictly regulated than guns, particularly when one considers that so many children are killed by guns every year. According to the National Center for Health Statistics, every day in America 13 children under the age of 19 are killed by gunfire.

The Firearms Safety and Violence Prevention Act would end the gun industry's preferential treatment by giving ATF the power to regulate firearms like other consumer products. ATF would have the authority to take the steps necessary to protect consumers from any unreasonable risk of injury resulting from the use of firearms or firearm products. ATF could meet this responsibility by setting safety standards, issuing recalls of defective firearms, and mandating warnings. Only if measures such as these failed to prevent the public from being exposed to an unreasonable risk of injury could ATF then prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transfer of a specific firearm.

The addition of violence prevention to ATF's agenda is vital to the continued viability of our Nation's health care system. Between 1960 and 1980, the Nation's firearm death rate increased 160 percent while the rate for other homicides declined. According to the Centers for Disease Control, firearm injuries soon may overtake motor vehicle injuries as the Nation's leading cause of injury mortality, and already have in eight States. That trend is not good news, since firearm injuries are more costly than any other type of injury. The total cost of firearm injuries in 1990 was $20.4 billion—a 42-percent increase in costs over the 1985 level. These health cost data illustrate the importance of preventing firearm injuries, and no agency can match ATF's expertise in relation to firearms.

Mr. Speaker, this bill represents a crucial step forward in the effort to promote public health because it sends the message that violence is preventable. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation and join me in sending that message.

THE FIREARMS SAFETY AND VIOLENCE PREVENTION ACT—AN ACT TO REGULATE THE MANUFACTURE AND SAFETY OF FIREARMS

Expands the authority of the Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) to regulate the design, manufacture, and distribution of firearms and ammunition. The Act grants ATF health and safety powers in addition to its law enforcement functions. ATF would be empowered to take the steps necessary to protect the public from unreasonable risk of injury resulting from the use of firearms or firearm products.

Expands ATF's jurisdiction to include firearm-related products (such as laser sights and trigger activators) and non-powder firearms.

Establishes within ATF a Firearms Violence Information and Research Clearinghouse to collect, analyze, and make available to the public data regarding the firearms industry as well as firearm-related death and injury.

Extends ATF's authority to include the ability to set safety standards, issue recalls of defective firearms, and mandate warnings.

Authorizes ATF to prohibit the manufacture and transfer of specific firearms, but only if the agency determines that the exercise of other authority granted the agency would be insufficient to prevent exposure of the public to unreasonable risk of injury.

Allows ATF to take emergency action to protect the public from "imminently hazardous" firearm products.

Requires manufacturers to test firearms and firearm products to guarantee compliance with relevant standards issued by ATF. All firearms and firearm products must be labeled with the name and address of the manufacturer to ensure that defective guns can be identified and traced.

Requires manufacturers to notify ATF of intent to manufacture new types of firearms.

Sets penalties of up to $5,000 per violation for civil violations of the Act. Criminal penalties may include imprisonment for not more than two years and fines under the existing criminal statute.

Establishes a private right of action for persons harmed by violations of the Act and allows for private enforcement of the provisions of the Act.

SENATE—Friday, August 5, 1994

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., and was called to order by the Honorable HARRIS WOFFORD, a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Beloved let us love one another: for love is of God * * *.—1 John 4:7.

Almighty God, holy, just, and loving in all Thy ways, the exhortation of the apostle John to love one another seems unrealistic or impractical in the atmosphere of politics. Nevertheless, the Bible insists it is the most powerful source in life. In the words of Paul, "Love suffereth long and is kind, love envieth not, love vaunteth not itself, love is not puffed up, love seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, love bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. Love never fails."

Help us, gracious Lord, to understand love as more than emotion. We have been exhorted to love our enemies—those who despitefully use us. Emotionally, we want to crush them, but we have been commanded to love. Help us to see love as volitional, as a matter of the will, as a decision. Help us to comprehend the profound truth that, "Love fulfills the law of God." Help us to determine to love one another, even in the atmosphere of politics.

We pray in His name who is incarnate love. Amen.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—S. 2346 AND S. 2357

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for those items currently listed under bills and joint resolutions read the first time to be considered to have received their second reading, en bloc, and objection having been heard to further proceedings, the measures be placed on the calendar as provided for under rule XIV, paragraph 2.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the Senate is now considering the Labor-HHS appropriations bill and will continue in consideration of that measure throughout the day. I expect amendments to be offered shortly to the bill following the managers' opening statements, and Senators, therefore, should be aware that votes may occur at any time during the day today.

Mr. President, as I previously announced on several occasions, following consultations with the distinguished Republican leader and many other Senators, it is my intention to proceed to consideration of health care reform legislation on next Tuesday afternoon. There will be, under the proposed schedule, a period for debate only lasting until Wednesday afternoon so as to permit all Senators who wish to make opening statements and make other comments to do so.

Beginning on Wednesday afternoon, the bill will be open to amendment and debate. The Senate will remain in session through Saturday of next week—that is through and including Saturday. And then we will return to session the following Monday and be in session Monday through Saturday for as long as it takes to complete action on the health care reform bill.

I introduced a bill on Wednesday of this week which is a blend of the bills previously acted upon by the Senate Labor Committee in early June and the Senate Finance Committee in early July. I stated when I introduced the bill, and I repeat now, that I welcome constructive suggestions and alternatives by other Senators. It is clear to all people that a bill of this magnitude will not pass the Senate without change. I expect the change to occur. I hope and expect much of it will be in the form of improvement.

I am open to constructive suggestion and alternative ways to achieve our common objective by other Senators. I have read in the newspaper that our Republican colleagues intend to introduce their bill today. I welcome that.

Obviously, the bill, as with the bill I introduced and all others, should and will be given careful scrutiny, and I hope that in the debate that follows, beginning next Tuesday, we can all remember that whatever State we represent and whatever political party we are in, our highest obligation is to the American people. This will be a rare opportunity to act in a meaningful and a constructive way. And while there clearly are, and appropriately so, differences on what our goals should be and on how to get there, there is no reason why we cannot conduct this debate in a positive and constructive way, concentrate on the issues rather than on the individuals, tone down the rhetoric on all sides, and, hopefully, reach a result that we and the American people can justifiably describe as meaningful reform action.

I want to assure all Senators that is my objective. I believe that to be the objective of most of the Members of the Senate. And I hope that we can conduct ourselves in a manner so that we will be proud not only of the product but of the process involved.

I thank my colleagues who have made suggestions so far with respect to the bill that I have introduced. I have already incorporated many of the suggested changes. We are continuing our consultation with other Senators. There will be some changes from the draft bill presented on Wednesday to when we introduce it next week. Some are technical in nature. Some correct the inevitable drafting errors in legislation of this magnitude. Some will incorporate what I believe to be constructive suggestions by Senators. That process will continue.

I have said, and I now repeat and emphasize, I am open about this. I want very much to produce a good result. I think that all of us have much to learn from each other. And for myself, I am interested only in getting a result that is good for the American people—not so much who makes it, who presents an idea, but what is the idea itself. I hope we can all approach the debate and conduct ourselves through the debate in that manner.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, will the leader yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. INOUYE. Am I to conclude from the leader's announcement that Defense appropriations will not be scheduled for Senate consideration until September?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, it is my hope that we can do so sooner. But it depends upon our ability to get through the rest of the schedule and the willingness of our colleagues, our Republican colleagues, to permit consideration of such a measure.

As I previously indicated to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, his is the last and one of the more important and significant of the appropriations bills that we will be considering. I have previously, and do now encourage him, if possible, to work out agreements which would limit the time which I think increases the likelihood of our gaining consent from our colleagues to bring the bill up and complete action on it.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I bring this up because I think it should be noted by my colleagues that the appropriations bill includes, among other things, funding for Rwanda, funding for Bosnia and other matters of urgent interest in the U.S. Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL. I agree completely with the Senator. As he knows, we have been taking these bills up largely in the order that they were reported out by the Appropriations Committee. Of the last two remaining, the bill we are now on, the Labor-HHS bill and the defense bill, Labor-HHS was reported out at an earlier time. I tended generally, although not in every instance, to proceed to them in the chronological order that they were reported out.

I will also say to the Senator that we will have to, if necessary, interrupt the debate next week to take up the crime conference report when the House acts on that. If it is at all possible to get an agreement and work in the DOD appropriations bill, I would be very receptive to that. That, of course, as the Senator knows, requires the consent of all of our colleagues. If we encounter objection to that—it will depend, in part, on other factors, such as when we complete action on the current bill and how long it would take to complete the bill that the Senator will manage.

So I assure him of my interest in doing so. I will do the very best I can in that regard.

Mr. INOUYE. I thank the leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I and the distinguished Senator from North Dakota be allowed 15 minutes of morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SPECTER. Reserving the right to object, I did not hear the request. How much time does the Senator from Nebraska ask for?

Mr. KERREY. Fifteen minutes equally divided between the distinguished Senator from North Dakota and myself.

Mr. SPECTER. I had understood that the Senator from Nebraska wanted 5 minutes. If I may have the attention of the manager of the bill, the Senator from Nebraska had asked for 5 minutes. We have been talking about the urgency of not having a Haiti amendment, which I intend to offer at the earliest moment for an hour equally divided. If we are going to try to finish this bill today, I just want to call my colleague's attention to that, and we will spend a lot of time talking about 15 minutes equally divided, but this is three times the request the Senator from Nebraska has just talked about.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota indicated to me that he had asked last night for morning business. I was consolidating it and trying to ask for an amount of time which I made sure I did not run over. I will deliver my statement as rapidly as possible so as not to cut into the debate on the bill.

Mr. SPECTER. To keep the time short, I shall not object.

Mr. HARKIN. I understand the request is 15 minutes equally divided between the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Nebraska.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I would like to add 5 minutes to that request.

Mr. HARKIN. I ask unanimous consent that there be 15 minutes equally divided—5 minutes for the Senator from Nebraska, 5 minutes for the Senator from North Dakota, 5 minutes for the Senator from Minnesota.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

UNIVERSAL HEALTH CARE

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, President Clinton, Wednesday night at his press conference, said in a statement that was broadcast and distributed across the Nation that he urged the American people, and us on their behalf, to go with him down the road to universal health care.

The route to be taken is either of the Democratic bills written by the Majority Leader GEPHARDT of the House or Majority Leader MITCHELL of the Senate. My answer, despite my great passion to have every American secure in the knowledge they will receive high-quality health care and despite my great respect for the President and both majority leaders, is no. I do not want America to go down the road the President is asking us to travel.

The road the President is asking us to travel takes us to a place where health care decisions will be increasingly centralized. The American public does not want that and their judgment is sound. They do not want political representatives or Government employees in Washington, DC, to make more of their health care decisions for them. They want them to make fewer.

The road the President is asking us to travel takes us to a place where Federal spending on health care entitlements will have displaced even more of a dwindling pool of household savings. As one representative who has some knowledge of these predictions, I do not trust forecasts that our deficits will get smaller or remain the same.

The air is full of promises to spend more. The winds carry a message to the people that our problem is we do not spend enough on health care, telling Americans they are victims of insidious individuals and institutions with malice in their hearts. Any campaign for universal coverage which proceeds upon these beliefs cannot be trusted to make the structure of America's fiscal house any stronger.

The road the President is asking us to travel takes us to a place where an even larger percentage of the Federal budget and a larger percentage of total taxes will be devoted to spending on health care.

Washington, DC, is already beginning to resemble an ATM machine where too many individuals and too many businesses come to get some extra cash. Worse, this emphasis on broadening and deepening the promise to pay somebody else's health care bills subordinates the promise of restraint or cost containment to the promise of free health care.

The present system already penalizes States like Nebraska where frugality and efficiency are the order of the day. Any bill with new entitlements will create more demand, driving prices even higher, making matters worse for my State. It will also make matters worse by creating new Federal regulations driving Americans to Washington, DC, for permission to proceed in a wide range of currently unregulated health care activities.

The majority leader has told me he is willing to make changes in this legislation. I believe him. I have great respect for his integrity and legislative ability. However, I want there to be no doubt that I will not vote for this bill as is. My vote is no.

Tomorrow, America will celebrate, or curse, the 1-year anniversary of enactment of legislation which passed because I voted yes. I believed the road America would travel with that legislation would take us in the direction of improved consumer confidence, leading to sustained economic recovery, lower interest rates, increased housing starts, more American jobs and lower deficit spending.

I voted "yes" because I believed the positives outweighed the negatives. The economy could withstand the blow of higher taxes and the weight of fiscal constraint imposed through tough spending caps. As it turned out, the economy not only survived, it has thrived.

I almost voted no, Mr. President, for two reasons, both of which are relevant to my decision to inform the President and my Senate Democratic leader, GEORGE MITCHELL, that I will not vote for his bill in its current form.

First, it did not finish the job of eliminating our deficit. It did not put us on a course of paying off rather than continuing to accumulate debt.

Second, the rhetoric which began with the lofty and powerful message of shared sacrifice, deteriorated into the harangue of the middle class as victims of the wealthy.

This time I will not vote yes unless this bill is changed. Unless the road takes us where the power of decisionmaking shifts away from Washington, DC, I will vote "no". Unless the road takes us to where cost containment is our overriding purpose, I will not agree to get on board, Mr. President.

This time I will only vote "yes" if the President follows his own stated desire to get a bipartisan bill. And there is a way. It is the so-called mainstream coalition which includes Senator CHAFEE, Senator DANFORTH, and Senator DURENBERGER, three of the Republican Party leading advocates of health care reform. The President should call them in and ask them what they want, support their requests as an amendment to the MITCHELL bill.

The coalition has great appreciation for the President's leadership. He will discover sincere gratitude for his service in the health care cause. He has driven this issue relentlessly and with a high sense of purpose. The President will also learn we are willing to fight so that every American has the help needed to pay the costs of health care. We want health care security to be universal.

However, we believe that unless you deal with costs first you cannot get to health care security. It is the rising costs of care that are making Americans feel insecure. Further, we believe that demand for expensive care in an environment where someone else pays the bills is principally responsible for higher costs. In order to achieve universality, the price of health care must be affordable for all Americans. We cannot risk creating new entitlements which drive up costs for everyone.

Government intervention to expand coverage is risky. Using history as a guide we should be very cautious to presume that government can get the job done. Every time we withdraw money from the non-health-care economy and drive it into the health care system, prices go up. Thus, as we collectively agree to pay someone's health care bills that agreement increases costs and makes it more unaffordable creating added pressure to pay more of someone's health care bills. It is a vicious cycle.

Indeed, it is fair to say the unprecedented reduction of health care costs which has taken place in the marketplace the past 2 years is at least in part attributable to the fear of Government action. It is the action in the market which gives us a clue about what we should do with our health care laws. It is the marketplace's success at controlling costs and the Federal Government's failure which leads me to conclude that we should use the forces of the market to control costs instead of the dictates of the Government.

The Mitchell bill has too many new Federal Government dictates. The majority leader has asked and next week we will supply him with suggested changes in his good faith effort to achieve consensus. Today, let me identify five areas of increased Federal decisionmaking:

FEDERAL OVERSIGHT OF STATES

The Federal Government would set requirements which status must follow in the new system. States would submit an application to the Federal Government specifying how they will meet the requirements. If the State does not submit an application, or if the Federal Government does not approve the application, the Federal Government can step in and take over health care reform in the State, and charge a 15-percent tax on all insurance. After a State's application is approved, it is subject to the Uncle Sam's variation of the random drug test: It can audit a State's program at any time.

FEDERAL OVERSIGHT OF MEDICINE

The Federal Government would decide how many doctors will be trained each year and how many go into primary care and how many will be permitted to train in each specialty and where they will train.

The National Health Board will set standards for what is medically necessary and appropriate treatment instead of doctors.

The National Health Benefits Board and the National Health Care Cost and Coverage Commission are exempted from the Federal Advisory Committee Act. Translation: They do not have to allow the public into their meetings.

FEDERAL REGULATION OF HEALTH SPENDING

The Federal Government would set the baseline for total health spending excluding Medicare and SSI based on 1994 spending for the standard benefit package. That number is trended forward in 1995 and 1996 based on CBO estimates for health care growth in their 1993 report. The Government then sets what the rate of growth will be beginning in 1997 and forward. Any plan that exceeds that will be taxed at 25 percent of the difference beginning in 1997. Big business and big unions are exempt from the tax until 1999.

FEDERAL REGULATION OF HEALTH INSURANCE

These regulations have the net effect of eliminating the existence of hospital indemnity policies, cancer policies, and other types of supplemental policies.

FEDERAL REGULATION OF SMALL BUSINESS

No business with fewer than 500 employees would be permitted to self-insure. All businesses of less than 500 would be required to join purchasing alliances.

I do not want to travel down this road, and I do not believe the people I represent want to either. They and I do want health care reform. They know that much in our current system is broken and they want it fixed. They know health care is becoming unaffordable for many and they know the ice of medical indigency grows thinner under their feet.

Increasingly, however, their mood is turning skeptical that we here in Washington, DC, know what we are doing. As they trust us less, they are less enthusiastic about any change we propose.

The source of their skepticism is the hyper-inflated and unnecessarily exaggerated language of the partisans for or against change. The cure for this skepticism is not a hard line decision to support or oppose one bill or another. Instead the cure is a broad based bipartisan effort to write a new law. Either we quickly produce a bipartisan majority—as I believe the mainstream coalition could become—or we should just as quickly abandon all hope of doing the people's will.

In conclusion, it will require States to come to Washington, DC, to get permission from a plan, and the Federal Government can take over the State's plan if they do not comply, giving the Federal Government the equivalent of a random drug test to come in and audit a State and take them over if they are not doing the right thing; increased regulation of business, Mr. President, increased regulation as well of the health care system and providers, increased opportunity for the Federal Government to make decisions about whether or not health care is going to be given.

Mr. President there has been unprecedented change in the marketplace in the last 3 years, and this legislation ought to recognize that change, ought to give the President full credit for producing some of it and ought to enact legislation that gets cost control done by taking advantage of it.

I yield the floor and I thank my friend from North Dakota.

DURUM WHEAT PRICES

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I appreciate the indulgence of the managers of the bill. I will be brief.

I did not want this week to go by without challenging the statements made by both the New York Times in their editorials and the pasta manufacturers, the pasta industry in this country, as a result of decisions the Clinton administration took against Canada on Monday of this week. The fact is the Canadian Wheat Board targeted the American grain market with a flood of unfairly subsidized durum. This administration finally stood up and took action, fair action, that says to the Canadians, you cannot engage in unfair trade against the American producer, against the American farmer. This administration did the right thing.

Now, let us look at what is being said. The pasta industry says this is going to have a very negative effect on the U.S. pasta industry; pasta producers are going to pay higher prices, which are also going to hit the consumer.

Now, look, this proves you do not have to think to run a pasta association, I guess. Let me show you a chart. And let us have a little show and tell. I say to the pasta manufacturers, bring your noodles, bring your linguini, bring your lasagna, your spaghetti here to Capitol Hill and let us talk. Let us find out what you did with the price of your macaroni when the price of durum went up and down.

I can show you 3 years when the price of durum wheat went down and the price of macaroni went up. Why? Why, when the price of durum wheat collapses $2 a bushel can you not walk into a grocery store, if there is such a relationship between durum wheat and macaroni, and find that macaroni prices are down in the grocery store? The fact is the pasta industry seldom, if ever, reduces their prices irrespective of what is happening to the price of durum wheat. That is a plain fact. If they dispute it, they ought to come to Capitol Hill and let us talk about it.

Second, that great bastion of knowledge about agriculture and trade, the New York Times, wrote an editorial that says the Clinton administration is keeping Canadian wheat out. Nonsense. A substantial amount of Canadian wheat will continue to come in. This administration just took the first action that finally says let us begin to stop this speeding train.

With all due respect to those folks who apparently wear coveralls and go to the New York Times every morning and think about agriculture and write these editorials, they ought to get the facts. The facts are this was unfair trade. This administration had every justification, in fact a requirement, to intervene on behalf of the U.S. producers. I am just flat sick and tired of every time there is a dispute between the big moneyed interests and the little folks, big moneyed interests win. This is a dispute that pits the big moneyed interests, some of the biggest food companies in this country with record profits, against the economic interests of the small family farmer. And guess who always wins?

Well, this administration finally stood up for the interests of the family farmer. It is about time. We could not get the time of the day from the Bush administration. This administration has taken action against Canada, and it ill-behooves the editors of the New York Times to write an editorial that does not contain the facts and reaches the wrong conclusion. And it certainly ill-behooves those who manufacture macaroni and spaghetti and lasagna in this country to tell us their prices have much to do with durum wheat. The fact is they buy durum. It does not matter what the price is; they jack up the price of pasta products in the grocery store. When durum wheat prices drop $2 a bushel, I defy anybody to go to the grocery store and find the beneficial nature of these big food corporations to rush in and reduce the sticker price of macaroni. It does not happen. Frankly, they take advantage for their own economic interests, for their own profits, and they care little about those who raise the durum wheat that produces the semolina flour that is eventually produced into a piece of elbow macaroni.

So I applaud the Clinton administration and Ambassador Kantor. It is about time. I ask the New York Times to write an editorial with the right facts, and that will lead you to the right conclusion. I say to the pasta manufacturers, if the price of macaroni has anything to do with the price of durum wheat, then let us see some reduced pasta prices for a change.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. How much time do I have remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota has 5 minutes.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I rise first to thank my colleague from North Dakota for his statement, and, in my time this morning, I would add to it the discussion of barley and some other situations that we have in common.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I listened with interest to my colleague, the majority leader, this morning talk about health care reform and the schedule we are on, and I am glad we are getting to that point. I appreciate also the comments about the fact it is time to rise up and do what is good for America. So I would like to take just a couple minutes this morning and remind everyone in this Chamber of a visual that I hope they cannot and do not forget, and that is the President of the United States, William Jefferson Clinton, on January 25, 1994, speaking on the subject and the challenge of health care reform, holding up his veto pen and saying: If the legislation you send me does not guarantee every American private health insurance that can never be taken away, I will take this pen, veto that legislation, and we will come right back here and start over again.

I hope that during the course of the debate, I and others will have an opportunity to continue to repeat that promise: If the legislation you send me does not guarantee every American private health insurance that can never be taken away, I will take this pen and veto that legislation.

Mr. President, we can get ready right now to veto the Gephardt bill, the Clinton bill, and the Mitchell bill. Not a one of these bills meets the test of the President of the United States. Neither does anything that the President has said since January 25, with the exception of one very lucid response to a Governor in Boston when he spoke on the subject of universal coverage. All of the rhetoric since January has been on the word "guarantee" and none of the rhetoric has been zeroed in on "private health insurance."

In all the talk about promises about universal coverage, about mandates, about triggers, hard and soft and in between, I have never forgotten the President's insistence on private health insurance for every American.

Mr. President, the bills presented by President Clinton, by Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. GEPHARDT do not guarantee private health plans to all Americans. The only way to make good on that guarantee is to give everyone an opportunity to buy a private health plan. The only way to make good on that guarantee is to make that plan affordable to every person to whom the guarantee is made. Otherwise, it is an empty promise. The only way to get affordable prices on health plans is to reduce the cost of medical and insurance services, maintain and improve quality of care, and expand access to those services. And the only way to improve quality and lower prices is through market competition.

So as I began looking through the 1400 or so pages of the latest Democratic proposal, Senator MITCHELL's bill, I went on a hunt for a marketplace. I have been through this drill before, back in a snowstorm in December, with the Clinton bill. I searched in vain for real market forces in the Labor Committee product—the same result. It is not there. And here we go again.

Mr. President, all is not lost. There is at the desk today the one bipartisan bill that has been passed through a committee of the Congress of the United States. Its number, if you care, is S. 2351. It was passed out of the Senate Finance Committee on July 2, 1994.

If you want to find out how to encourage medical markets, I urge you to read S. 2351. I urge you to listen to the comments of those of us who have worked so hard over this period of time to get to this point. Remember, the President promised the American people private health plans. The Finance Committee bill extends that promise to the elderly. For nearly 30 years, America's elderly have been forced at age 65 to join the Federal Government's single-payer system we call Medicare. The Finance Committee bill gives American elderly a way out of a wasteful Canadian system back into America, a private health plan that cannot be taken away. The Mitchell bill drops out all of those provisions. Instead, it slashes payments to the doctors and the hospitals who serve Medicare patients and uses all of the proceeds for a new drug benefit.

Mr. President, I express my appreciation to the managers of this bill for yielding time from morning business.

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, what is the regular order?

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, for the purposes of floor consideration of H.R. 4606, the Labor-HHS appropriations bill, that William Cordess, Ellen Murray, Ron Yucas, and Antonio Clinkscales be given floor privileges. They are temporarily detailed to the committee staff.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, we are now on the Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and related agencies appropriations bill for fiscal year 1995 that is now before the Senate.

So I ask Senators who have amendments, after the opening statements of me and Senator SPECTER, to be ready to offer their amendments so that we might finish at a reasonable hour yet today.

This bill before us totals $252.8 billion for both discretionary and mandatory spending. This bill is $6.647 billion below the appropriations for fiscal 1994.

So this is in keeping with the budget caps and the reductions for the 5-year period. That amount includes $182.9 billion for mandatory programs, a decrease of 4.9 percent from last year's level. It also includes $69.976 billion in discretionary budget authority.

The recommendations before the Senate is at its 602(b) outlay ceiling, so any amendments that Members want to offer today will have to be fully offset.

As the Senators know, this year has been particularly challenging for this subcommittee. As I said last year, the President presented us with a size 12 budget, but we received an allocation to accommodate only a size 9 shoe. This year, our feet got bigger, and our shoe smaller.

Our problem began with last year's reconciliation bill which essentially froze discretionary outlays for 5 years. That freeze presented special problems for our subcommittee, which includes nearly all of the President's people-first investments—for education reform, job retraining, and children's programs—and 40 percent of the President's entire investment package, far greater than any other subcommittee. And more than all this subcommittee's increases were devoted to those investments. In fact, the President's original budget called for $2.6 billion in increase for his investments, which is greater than the overall net increase in outlays for this subcommittee.

Our situation got worse with the allocation process. A combination of CBO's rescoring of the President's budget and the Exon-Grassley amendment to the budget resolution forced $3.6 billion in cuts to the President's overall budget. The end result of the President's appeal was that our subcommittee suffered a cut in its allocation nearly equal to the Defense Subcommittee, even through defense is nearly three times larger than ours.

As with every year, this subcommittee and staff faced additional pressures from the numerous requests by other Senators for increases in their particular programs. This year, staff received more than 1,000 requests from 96 individuals Senators.

I also want to say that I am grateful to the President and his staff for helping us to find additional sources of budget authority and outlays for this subcommittee to help meet at least most of the requests and the needed investment package in our subcommittee.

Our bill provides 43 percent of the increases the President requested for his investment programs, including:

A total of $1.296 billion for dislocated workers assistance, $120 million for one-stop career centers, $1.08 billion for Job Corps, and $200 million evenly divided between the Departments of Labor and Education for the school-to-work initiative;

A total of $3.544 billion for Head Start, a $220 million increase over last year; and $634 million for Ryan White, a $54 million increase, and the President's request for immunizations;

A total of $11.33 billion for NIH, a $395 million increase over last year; and

A total of $7.7 billion for the President's education investments, including $428 million for Goals 2000, and $6.7 billion for title I.

In addition, the subcommittee has provided $1.385 billion for the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program. That is $160 million more than the House figure, and $655 million more than the President's request. In addition, we have included $1.475 billion in advance funding for fiscal 1996, and $600 million in an emergency fund. I want to specially thank Senator SPECTER for all his efforts to increase funding over the House level for this important program.

Also, the subcommittee has provided $100 million for a new program providing construction and repair grants to disadvantaged urban and rural school districts. Neither the administration request nor the House bill included funds for this activity.

I believe that this is going to be a very important program that we are starting to help rebuild, and renovate schools in disadvantaged areas. It will provide jobs for people to work, and I think it will be one of the best welfare programs we have ever had because not only will it put people to work, but it will put them to work renovating, rebuilding, and building schools in urban and rural areas, disadvantaged areas.

Like last year, the subcommittee has included a number of provisions to reduce administrative costs, reduce duplication, and promote consolidation of programs within our jurisdiction.

In response to the recommendations of the Vice President's National Performance Review, this subcommittee eliminated 25 existing programs or programs that were created by the House in this year's appropriations bill.

Our bill freezes program management accounts for most departments, including the Department of Education, the Administration on Aging, HRSA [Health Resources Services Administration], and Administration on Children and Families. In addition, our bill cuts below the fiscal 1994 levels, the administrative accounts for several other offices, including the Office of the Secretary at HHS, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, AHCPR, SAMHSA Program Management, and the Assistant Secretary for Health.

Limits have been placed on employee bonuses for all agencies, requiring that no more than 1 percent of all salary and benefit funds can be used for employee bonuses. Furthermore, we have capped the number of employees in a single agency who can receive cash awards.

So I wanted to bring that especially to Senators' attention. I know we always have amendments that say we will take money out of salaries and expenses and we will put them into a program that we like. Again, I want to repeat for emphasis sake that in most of the management accounts we have frozen them or we have cut them below last year's level, and we put the limit on how much bonuses can be given out.

So I ask Senators to please take that into account if they have such amendments in mind.

Following up on several hearings our subcommittee held this year on waste, fraud and abuse, our bill takes several steps to implement the recommendations from those hearings. Specifically, the bill provides for—

An increase of $7.2 million for payment safeguards to eliminate overcharges to the Medicare Program. Historically, payment safeguards have been documented to save $14 for every $1 invested.

A pilot demonstration of an information system designed to help investigators detect potential Medicaid fraud. Such automated systems are an effective tool in combating health care fraud.

A requirement that prevents payment of workmen's compensation benefits to convicted felons. This requirement expands on the restrictions we imposed last year that eliminated workmen's compensation benefits for those who defrauded that program.

Increased monitoring by the Social Security Administration to identify and suspend SSI benefits to recipients who do not comply with drug or alcohol treatment requirements; certification from Government contractors that they will not knowingly claim costs that have been previously judged unallowable. Additionally, should a contractor be convicted of filing such a fraudulent claim, the conviction will be a felony punishable by fines and/or imprisonment.

So, Mr. President, there are many highlights, but I will not take the time to discuss them again. I want to yield to Senator SPECTER for any comments he would like to make and say that we are indebted to Senator SPECTER for his advice and assistance throughout this long process. His counsel is reflected throughout this bill and report, and I am grateful to him and his staff.

Following his comments, we will be open for any statements or amendments Members wish to make. Any amendments that are offered will, of course, require appropriate offsets.

As in previous years, $500,000 of the funds appropriated for targeted training grants under OSHA's compliance assistance activity is to be used to award demonstration grants for people employed in the logging industry. People in this hazardous industry have and will continue to benefit from continued efforts under the pilot worker safety program.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement clarifying several provisions in the committee report, Senate Report 103-294, accompanying this legislation, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE REPORT 103-318 CLARIFICATION

On page 85, under the section dealing with the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, the language concerning "Infertility and Contraceptive Research" should be moved to the section dealing with the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development.

Mr. HARKIN. I yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, at the outset, I compliment the chairman, Senator HARKIN, his staff, and my staff, on an extraordinary job of accommodating many, many conflicting interests.

The appropriations bill on discretionary accounts amounts to slightly less than $70 billion. While that may sound like a great sum of money—and it is—accommodating the appropriations process for labor, health, human services, and education is an enormous task.

I will supplement what Senator HARKIN has said by way of brief summary, because there is an interest in moving ahead to complete this bill today, if we can.

With respect to the issue of health and human services, we have added to the National Institutes of Health almost $400 million, bringing that account to $11.3 billion. That is the account which has been consistently increased, notwithstanding frequent requests by the Presidents, whether they are Democrats or Republicans, to have a cut in that account. This is my 14th year in the Senate, my 14th year in service on this subcommittee, and there has been consistent attention to that account, notwithstanding the cuts in the budget generally. I believe that has served America, really, and the world, tremendously.

We have seen advances in technology. We have seen advances in gene research. So now there are marvelous breakthroughs on cystic fibrosis, cholesterol, Alzheimer's disease, and enormous progress on AIDS and cancer, and technical developments with mechanisms like the MRI, of which I personally was a major beneficiary last year.

I think that is an enormous achievement where there will be additional funds for research on many lines—AIDS, breast cancer, prostate cancer. There have been specific additional increases in funding on screening for breast and cervical cancer, an increase of almost $22 million; increases in funds for Ryan White and other AIDS services. So that on the medical side, as the Congress is looking at comprehensive health reform, this subcommittee has been hard at work on providing very important funding for very important matters.

With respect to education, again, there has been priority treatment here with additional funding for Head Start for youngsters, some $220 million extra, now totaling in excess of $3.5 billion a year, on the recognition that early education is so important. Even Start has had an increase in funding. We have had an increase in student financial assistance on the basic recognition that education is so vital for our society as we move into the 21st century.

With respect to mine safety and health, there has been an increase in funding for black lung, provisions for dislocated workers, Job Corps, school-to-work programs; and I think that we have taken a very hard look at the priorities and have come up with a bill which is as carefully crafted as possible. I think it meets the objectives and priorities of the sums of money involved.

LIHEAP—Low-Income Housing Energy Assistance Program—has been of tremendous concern as those funds have been decreased. It is a matter of enormous importance in Iowa, Pennsylvania, the New England States—all over the country. There has been a considerable addition in LIHEAP in this bill.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be agreed to en bloc; that the bill, as thus amended, be regarded for the purposes of amendment as original text, provided that no point of order shall have been considered to have been waived by agreeing to this request; and that the following committee amendments be excepted from this en bloc request:

Page 25, lines 8 through 13; page 50, line 17; page 78, line 16 through page 81, line 8; page 63, line 5 through page 64, line 4; page 68, line 18 through page 69, line 5; page 78, line 24 through page 79, line 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, we are ready to go to amendments at any point.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I believe it is in order that I request unanimous consent that the pending committee amendment be temporarily laid aside and that it be in order to consider the committee amendment beginning on page 25, line 8; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator that that is the pending committee amendment; therefore, no unanimous consent request is required.

AMENDMENT NO. 2460 TO THE EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 25, LINES 8 THROUGH 13

(Purpose: To prohibit the use of the United States Armed Forces in Haiti)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 25, line 13, before the last period, insert the following:

SEC. 108. PROHIBITION ON THE USE OF THE UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES IN HAITI.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Article I, Section 8 of the United States Constitution provides that Congress shall have the sole power to declare war; and

(2) On July 31, the United Nations Security Council adopted Resolution 940, which authorizes member states of the United Nations to use all necessary means to facilitate the departure from Haiti of the military leadership, consistent with the Governors Island Agreement, the prompt return of the legitimately elected President, and the restoration of the legitimate authorities of the Government of Haiti.

(b) PROHIBITION OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES IN HAITI.—The President is prohibited from using the United States Armed Forces to facilitate the departure of the military leadership and the restoration of the legitimately elected government.

(c) The prohibition in subsection (b) does not apply if—

(1) the use of the United States Armed Forces in Haiti is authorized in advance by Congress;

(2) the temporary deployment of forces of the United States Armed Forces into Haiti is necessary in order to protect or evacuate United States citizens from a situation of imminent danger and the President reports as soon as practicable to Congress after the initiation of the temporary deployment, but in no case later than 48 hours after the initiation of the temporary deployment; or

(3) the deployment of forces of the United States Armed Forces into Haiti is vital to the national security interests of the United States (including the protection of American citizens of Haiti), there is not sufficient time to seek and receive congressional authorization, and the President reports as soon as practicable to Congress after the initiation of the deployment, but in no case later than 48 hours after the initiation of the deployment.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I believe that once the amendment is proposed, the Senator loses the right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Once the amendment is offered, the floor is open for recognition, but the Chair recognized the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Chair. I will be glad to yield to my colleague from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, the only reason I sought recognition was to ask the Senator if he was prepared to enter into a time agreement on this particular amendment. That was the only reason.

I yield back to the Senator.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the chairman. I am prepared to do that.

Senator HARKIN and I had discussed the time agreement and it is agreeable to have a 1-hour time agreement equally divided.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will propound a unanimous consent request.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 11:30 a.m., Senator MCCAIN, or his designee, be recognized to move to table the Specter amendment No. 2460, with the time between now and then equally divided and controlled in the usual form, with no other amendments in order prior to the vote on the motion to table; that the time be controlled by Senator SPECTER, or his designee, and by Senator MCCAIN, or his designee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the amendment proposes that there be a prohibition on the use of armed forces in Haiti unless there is specific authorization in advance by Congress or the temporary deployment of forces in Haiti is necessary in order to protect or evacuate United States citizens or the deployment of forces is vital to the national security interests of the United States and there is not sufficient time to seek and receive congressional authorization.

We have debated the Haiti issue substantially on this floor, Mr. President, in the course of the past several weeks, and I believe that it is necessary to consider this amendment for a number of reasons.

One reason is that notwithstanding the sense-of-the-Senate resolutions expressing the concern of the Senate and objecting to the deployment of military forces in Haiti, the President of the United States has continued to say that he does not have to get congressional authority to move ahead with an invasion in Haiti.

It is my view that the President is incorrect and that as a matter of fundamental constitutional law, where the sole authority to declare war resides in the Congress, and the Congress has spoken, the Senate has spoken in opposition to an invasion in Haiti, the President may not proceed on the current record without a change in circumstances or cannot proceed when Congress is in session and there is an opportunity for the President to come to Congress to get congressional authorization as the Constitution requires.

The President had a news conference on Wednesday night, August 2, the day before yesterday, and it was reported in the New York Times, August 3, and I read a brief extract of the President's statement at that time. This is with respect to Haiti:

> I would welcome the support of the Congress, and I hope that I will have that like my predecessors of both parties. I have not agreed that I was constitutionally mandated to get it, but at this moment I think we have done all we need to do because I do not want to cross that bridge until we come to it.

The suggestion has been made, Mr. President, that this type of an amendment is premature, but it is my view that we do not know when the Congress will recess. We do not know when the President may proceed to use force in Haiti, and it is necessary that the Senate speak as clearly and as unequivocally as possible and the Senate speak promptly after the President's statement on Wednesday night.

When the United Nations moved to authorize the use of force in Haiti at the request of the United States, it seems to me that the President, short of coming to Congress, had taken the last step to set the stage for the invasion of Haiti. On Monday of this week, the day following the United Nations action, I asked the majority leader if he had an intention of bringing to the floor a resolution authorizing the use of force as the Congress considered such a resolution before the war in Iraq, and the majority leader told me that he had not considered that but would do so. I talked with him again yesterday afternoon, and he advised me that he thought it was premature to undertake such a consideration of such a resolution. I respectfully disagree with the majority leader because I believe that it is necessary to consider that resolution at this time.

The majority leader has considerably more power in the premises than does any other Senator because the majority leader establishes the schedule of the Senate as to when we will be here. I do not know how long the Senate will be in session during the month of August before the break if there is to be a break. I understand, too, that the majority leader cannot be sure, depending upon how long the debate takes on the crime bill and how long the debate takes on the legislation for reform of our health system.

But the majority leader does have the authority to keep the Senate in for an extra day or two, and the majority leader does have the authority to set the agenda so that if he sets forth a resolution for the use of force in Haiti as he set forth a resolution for the use of force in Iraq back in 1991, he has that control which is obviously greater than the control which any other Senator has.

The other consideration on what may or may not be premature is that it is impossible to make a determination as to what the President will do. He has not said that he is going to use force or established any timetable, and there is substantial speculation in the press about when it may or may not occur. But it is entirely possible that the President may decide to use force and to invade Haiti when the Senate goes out of session later in August or perhaps in early September. I believe it is vitally important that the Senate, as one of the two Houses of the Congress, speak as emphatically and as directly as we can on this subject.

There have been a series of amendments and the sense-of-the-Senate resolutions passed by overwhelming numbers expressing our sense that there not be an invasion of Haiti. When the resolutions have taken a slightly different form, that is, to prohibit funding for an invasion, a different result occurred largely along party lines with the Senate being unwilling to cut off funding for an invasion in Haiti, and then after that, an additional amendment was offered again expressing the sense of the Senate that there not be an invasion and that resolution passed in large numbers. And then the distinguished Republican leader, Senator DOLE, and Senator GREGG offered an amendment saying that the U.N. resolution on the use of force did not constitute authorization by the Congress, and that passed unanimously 100 to nothing.

That was an important resolution because there is some legal theory that the United States is bound by treaties that become the supreme law of the land, and there might be a commitment by the United States to proceed to use force—notwithstanding the constitutional provision—because of the authorization by the United Nations.

One of the difficulties is that the sense-of-the-Senate resolutions are not binding. I considered what might be done procedurally to set forth a resolution authorizing the use of force and then arguing against it because I believe we should not invade Haiti, and I considered a sense-of-the-Senate resolution and decided that a more direct and a more binding way is to provide for a prohibition on the use of United States Armed Forces in Haiti. And that is what this amendment provides.

There are two issues, Mr. President, involved here. One is the constitutional issue, and the second is the public policy as to whether Haiti ought to be invaded. I think that the constitutional issue is institutionally the more important by far.

Taking up the question of an invasion of Haiti on the merits, there has been a virtual unanimity or overwhelming majorities in the Senate, 98 to 2 and, I believe, 93 to 4, on the sense of the Senate that Haiti should not be invaded, that we do not have vital national interests at stake. When we went into Haiti in 1915, we were there some 19 years, and it was a mistake then, and it will be a mistake now.

The President, in his press conference on Wednesday, uses another concept, a concept of fundamental interest as he articulates it. The word "vital" interests, I think, has some substantial meaning. I do believe that the Senate is virtually unanimous that there is not a vital national interest in invading Haiti, and the House of Representatives has spoken on the matter as well.

And yet, in the face of that, the President persists in saying that "I have not agreed that I was constitutionally mandated to get it"—"it", obviously, referring to congressional approval.

Mr. President, I believe that we have strayed a long way in the United States from the head-on recognition of Congress' sole authority to declare war and have moved a great deal where the powers of the President, as Commander in Chief, have been expanded.

This is a subject that I have been concerned about long before coming to the Senate, and have expressed myself on it on many occasions in my 14 years here in the Senate.

Korea, by all accounts, was a war, but Congress never declared war there. Once the President initiates an action—as President Truman did on June 25, 1950—Congress could exercise power by limiting funds, but has never done that. It is, as a practical matter, not realistic to cut off funding once the President has dispatched troops to the field.

I recall the day well, June 25. I started that day at Lowry Air Force Base in ROTC summer training between my third and fourth years at the University of Pennsylvania. When several thousand young men started that training, the thought in all of our minds was that we probably would not take the khaki off with the Korean war starting. We were not correct on that. I went back, as did the others, to finish my 4 years of college and then served as a lieutenant in the Office of Special Investigations in the Air Force stateside.

But it seemed to me at that time the constitutional mandate was not observed. Then we became embroiled in the Vietnam war. There was never a declaration of war there, and we had the Gulf of Tonkin resolution. I think Vietnam demonstrated that the United States could not fight a war without public support. The first line to get that public support is in the Congress. And I think that applies today to Haiti, as well.

When we had issues on Lebanon, the matter was debated under the War Powers Act. I had a debate with Senator Percy about whether Korea was a war, about whether Vietnam was a war. Senator Percy then was chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and the best person to talk to about that. He agreed that both of those events constituted war, and yet there had not been a declaration. I consulted with Senator Baker, then our majority leader, and went through the laborious task of drafting a complaint to try to get a Supreme Court determination of the relative authority of the President and the Congress under the constitutional provisions. I tried to get a submission to the Supreme Court with the agreement of the President, not that that necessarily would have prevailed, where the Court takes only cases in controversy, and the White House turned it down at that time.

We have seen the matters evolve in many situations which I will not go into now. But I think it is safe to say, Mr. President, that there has never been a situation like Haiti, where the Congress has spoken repeatedly and definitely on our judgment that we should not invade Haiti and the President has come back and, on Wednesday night, says again that he does not consider it necessary to get congressional authorization.

I was one who spoke out early on the Iraq situation after the United Nations authorized the use of force there, spoke out and said that the President, President Bush, a Republican President, did not have the authority to use force in Iraq unless there was congressional approval.

There was a very complex series of events. Senator HARKIN spoke up on January 3, 1991 on a procedural issue, which I think compelled bringing that matter to the Senate. There was a very extensive debate. The use of force was authorized and I supported it. But I thought it was important for the Congress institutionally to make that decision, and we did at that time.

And, similarly, I think it is very important institutionally that the Congress make a decision if there is to be an invasion of Haiti.

We talk about what constitutes a war, semantics as to whether the Korean conflict was a war. Certainly, it was. In my legal opinion, where there is an invasion of Haiti under these circumstances, it is a war; not a war that will necessarily be hard to win. But what do we do after we are there? And what does it do to the institutions of American Government where the constitution is explicit that only the Congress has the authority to declare war?

Congress has spoken about its sense of the matter and we have a renewed statement by the President of the United States that he does not consider himself to be constitutionally obliged—"I have not agreed that I was constitutionally mandated to get it," referring to congressional authorization.

So this is the articulation of this issue in the terms that most squarely presents the issue. That is why I have offered the amendment here. I do not wish to see this bill encumbered unnecessarily, but I think this is an important amendment. Since we have debated it in the past, I thought we could handle it in the course of an hour's debate. I am advised that the leadership does not want a vote before 11:30, so I do not think we are encumbering the process here and I do not believe that there are any other Senators who have any other amendments to offer.

But I make no apologies for offering this amendment at this time. There is no other way to take it up. We are not likely to have the defense appropriations bill on the floor before the recess. And, who knows, this issue may have to be revisited when other legislation is on the floor between now and the time of recess, depending upon what events transpire.

I inquire of the Chair, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has 18 minutes and 20 seconds remaining. The Senator from Arizona has the full 35 minutes.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. President, according to the unanimous-consent agreement, I will be offering a motion to table the Specter amendment at the expiration of the time.

Mr. President, it is kind of an unusual situation, because in every way I am in agreement with Senator SPECTER and the majority of this body on this issue. To me, the Specter amendment—which has been addressed in various forms in the past, and I have spoken out on this constitutional issue on several occasions—is one of an interpretation of the Constitution of the United States.

Before I go further and my friend from Pennsylvania departs, I would say that I believe that he is one of the foremost constitutional experts in this country. I believe that on many occasions he has illuminated this body on the Constitution of the United States. I appreciate the many contributions he has made.

On this particular issue, we happen to disagree, although on a constitutional basis, not on whether we should invade Haiti. I appreciate the continued efforts of the Senator from Pennsylvania to alert the people of this country as to the consequences of an invasion and also an invasion without congressional approval, which the Senator from Pennsylvania correctly assumes is an extreme likelihood.

> Senior officials said that at a meeting of Clinton's senior foreign policy and security advisers on Tuesday, Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. John Shalikashvili laid out a 4-to-6 week period as "optimal" for assembling and training an international coalition. September also would have the virtue of coinciding with the end of the upcoming congressional recess, should Clinton be disposed to consult.

So, I do not think there is any doubt that the congressional recess has an impact on the decisionmaking process in the White House, which I find, frankly, very distasteful.

Mr. President, it is well known, and I will not go into detail, all the reasons I am opposed to an invasion of Haiti. I do not think it is in our national security interest. I do not think it is worth the risk of American lives. Very importantly, I believe once we are there, without the ability to disengage, the ability to form some international force—which we are finding nearly impossible to get together—the chances of their succeeding are about the same as those of the multinational force that tried and failed in Somalia.

I am also deeply concerned—and I have to mention this again —that in yesterday's New York Times and again in this morning's Washington Post, Mr. Strobe Talbott, the No. 2 person who is described as being the lead person on this issue, is in opposition to speaking with or negotiating with Mr. Cedras and those other thugs in Haiti. He said he found it, according to the New York Times, "morally repugnant," although he did not in the past find it morally repugnant for the United States to talk with Mr. Brezhnev who invaded Afghanistan and slaughtered thousands of innocent people. But he finds it morally repugnant to talk to Cedras. Whereas Secretary of Defense Perry, as portrayed by the media, strongly feels we should try everything, every possible avenue before we put American lives at risk.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent this article from the Washington Post be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BEST TIME TO INVADE HAITI IS WEEKS AWAY, AIDES SAY

(By Ann Devroy and Daniel Williams)

President Clinton's top advisers have concluded they need until at least mid-September to launch an invasion of Haiti under "optimal" conditions, senior officials said yesterday.

That conclusion, reached following a series of high-level meetings on Haiti this week, is based on what officials said was the time required to enlist and train the international component of an invasion force headed by the United States, although so far no country has stepped forward to join such a force. Argentina, the only country to have made a public commitment, yesterday withdrew.

Officials say they also want to plug the porous border with the Dominican Republic, long a major hole in the economic blockade of Haiti. About 30 percent of Haiti's energy needs are met with gasoline and oil coming across the border.

"It will be a matter of some weeks" before the United States is prepared to invade, said one official, although others noted that if American lives were threatened or Haiti exploded in violence, military action could be undertaken right away.

Another high-ranking official said that President Clinton, who was involved in some but not all of the meetings, has "a great number of individual decisions to make," including a determination that economic sanctions will produce no further progress and invasion is the only option to achieve his goal of ousting Haiti's military rulers.

Pending decisions include whether to issue a public deadline for their departure from the country, whether to send a high-profile envoy to Haiti to deliver an ultimatum to the military, and whether to enlist support in Congress for an invasion.

The delay in reaching decisions has costs, for Haiti suffering under sanctions and a repressive regime, but also for Washington in its efforts to synchronize policy with other countries.

Even as efforts to collect invasion partners have been unsuccessful so far, Venezuela and other hemispheric governments that oppose invasion prepared a separate diplomatic approach to Haiti. The Venezuelans have proposed sending a delegation of foreign ministers to Haiti to offer a secure and comfortable exile to Haiti's military leaders, and amnesty for their subordinates left behind.

If Haitian military leaders Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras and others refuse, the ministers would warn of invasion, Venezuelan officials said. Yesterday Venezuela put the plan on hold pending a clear sign from the United States that invasion would follow an ultimatum. "We don't want to go with a weak hand," said Enrique Tejera Paris, Venezuela's ambassador to the United Nations.

U.S. officials expressed some dismay over the Venezuelan proposal, however, saying it might cause greater delay if it involves prolonged negotiation. The officials also said they feared it would result in letting Cedras and the others off the hook.

Senior officials said that at a meeting of Clinton's senior foreign policy and security advisers on Tuesday, Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. John Shalikashvili laid out a four-to-six week period as "optimal" for assembling and training an international coalition. September also would have the virtue of coinciding with the end of the upcoming congressional recess, should Clinton be disposed to consult.

The officials discussed but rejected setting an internal deadline for the Haitian rulers to leave, fearing that it would become public and tie the administration's hands. Defense Secretary William J. Perry was particularly opposed, senior officials said.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher argued for no further negotiations with the Haitian military, but he was opposed by Perry who said that all options should be given a chance because American lives would be at stake.

Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott and Perry clashed over whether financial inducements should be offered to Cedras and others, with Talbott opposing, officials said.

White House and other administration officials yesterday attempted to portray the administration as united, with everyone in agreement that the United States must lead an invasion force as a "last resort" and that all other options would be exhausted first. The rest was mere debate over tactics, they said.

Clinton has "not even entered this discussion seriously," a senior official added.

Supporters and advisers of deposed President Jean-Bertrand Aristide here suspect that delay is a maneuver by the Clinton administration to prepare for compromise with anti-Aristide political forces in Haiti. They say that Talbott and Clinton's national security adviser Anthony Lake have talked of a need for a political counterweight in the Haitian government to Aristide, viewed as radical by many U.S. officials.

Meanwhile, White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said yesterday that the United States has asked Haitian authorities for permission to send a charter plane to pick up as many as 500 Haitians who have been approved to come to the United States as refugees. She said no response has been received.

Haiti has been without international air service since Sunday, when Air France, the last carrier operating out of Port-au-Prince, suspended all flights. American and other international carriers stopped serving Haiti weeks ago as part of the international sanctions.

Myers said that if the U.S. request to send a charter plane is turned down, other means of evacuating the Haitians will be explored, according to the Associated Press.

In addition to the 500 who are ready to leave, another 1,000 or so Haitians also have been declared eligible for refugee status but are not ready to travel because their paperwork is not complete.

Officials said they are pleased with current trends, noting only one Haitian has been rescued at sea since Sunday. In contrast, more than 3,200 were saved on July 4, the most since Haitians began to flee after Aristide's ouster almost three years ago.

Mr. McCAIN. "Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott and Perry clashed over whether financial inducements should be offered to Cedras and others, with Talbott opposing, officials said."

Then most alarming of all, Mr. President—in fact I find it unbelievable—the article says, "Clinton"—obviously President Clinton—"Clinton has 'not even entered this discussion seriously,' a senior official added."

Here we are making plans for an invasion of Haiti and the President of the United States has "not even entered this discussion seriously." Give me a break. I think it is time that the President of the United States entered this discussion seriously.

We have sent, in clear and unequivocal terms within the constitutional constraints of this body and the Congress of the United States, the views of the Senate of the United States against an invasion of Haiti. I believe the 100-to-0 vote that just occurred in this body within the last 48 hours on a resolution stating unequivocally that authorization by the United Nations does not constitute authorization by the Congress of the United States sends a clear message. Time after time both bodies in this Congress have sent sense-of-the-Congress resolutions saying we are opposed to an invasion of Haiti. The message is clear, and it reflects the overwhelming majority view of the American people.

My problem with the Specter amendment is that it exceeds the authority of the Congress of the United States. The first military endeavor in the history of this country was a dispatch of naval forces to the Mediterranean to stop the Barbary pirates, as they were then known, from interfering with U.S. commerce in the Mediterranean. The great nations were not disturbed by these pirates. Those ships were sent. They engaged in combat—very successful combat I am happy to say. There was conflict, they took casualties, and the Congress of the United States never made a declaration of war or even a declaration of approval. That has been the case throughout.

Senator SPECTER mentioned the case of Korea. I would say to Senator SPECTER, at any time if the Congress of the United States had shown the willingness to do so, they could have had a resolution on a declaration of war. They chose not to.

There was a case, I inform my friend from Pennsylvania, in the case of Cambodia, where the Congress of the United States did cut off funds which prevented further aerial bombardment of Cambodia. I did not happen to agree with that decision of Congress, but there is historical precedent for congressional action, after the President of the United States acts.

Why is that? Why did our Founding Fathers give this enormous authority to one person, the Commander in Chief of the U.S. Armed Forces, the President of the United States? Because legislative bodies cannot anticipate events in the world. If we use the philosophy and the line of thinking of this amendment, we should be considering as amendments to this bill resolutions by the Senate prohibiting our engagement in Rwanda. Right now there is a possibility of our being involved militarily in Rwanda. Perhaps this body wants to speak on that issue.

In Bosnia, clearly the Bosnian peace process is breaking down. Should we be considering legislation prohibiting the President of the United States from engaging militarily in Bosnia? I do not want the President of the United States to engage militarily in Bosnia, but I can draw a scenario where, if the Balkan conflict spreads throughout the region, then maybe, tragically the United States may have to be involved. But should we have passed an amendment, a binding amendment on the President of the United States that he not go into Bosnia?

Mr. President, it is impossible for legislative bodies to anticipate world events. That is why our Founding Fathers put those responsibilities, enormous responsibilities—the lives of American service men and women—within the authority of the President of the United States of America.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has 26 minutes 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, we put that enormous responsibility into the hands of the President of the United States because there is no way that a legislature can anticipate events in the world which would require U.S. reaction. And that is particularly true in the 20th century.

But if the President of the United States embarks on a wrong or dangerous course—on a course which involves the needless and wasteful loss of American lives, then the Congress of the United States does have the clear responsibility—not just the privilege or right, but responsibility—to act. We have the power of the purse. If the President of the United States leads this country into some kind of military debacle, then we can cut off those funds. That is clear. That was exercised, as I mentioned, in the case of the bombing of Cambodia back in the year 1973, if I remember correctly.

So the problem that I see here is that if we approve an amendment, no matter how well-meaning and no matter how much I share the goal of prohibiting the President of the United States from invading Haiti, there is no reason why we should not be able to prohibit the President of the United States from going anywhere in the world. And, unfortunately, this body, the Congress of the United States, does not have the clairvoyance and ability to predict events anywhere in the world.

Two or three years ago, I do not believe there were many Americans who knew where Bosnia was. Unfortunately, today most Americans do not know where Macedonia is, where we happen to have a few hundred marines stationed. I do not believe the people of this country are appreciative—nor should they be—of the flash points of the world, nor of the fact that there are conflicts going on in 40 places in the world. It takes a wise and foresighted foreign policy in order to anticipate where the United States may have to be militarily involved, where our vital national security interests are threatened.

I would say again to my friend from Pennsylvania, elections have consequences. Elections have consequences, as we all know. I supported and I believe that the foreign policy of the Reagan-Bush administration will go down in history as perhaps one of this Nation's finest hours in the conduct of foreign policy. I do not have to review for my colleagues the incredible events that took place between the years 1981 and 1993 that literally changed the shape and complexion of this world. Our children can now go to sleep at night without fear of a nuclear exchange. But the fact is, at no time during those years would I have contemplated prohibiting the President of the United States from military actions any place in the world.

In 1983, when we were considering a resolution about Beirut, I went to the floor of the House of Representatives where I was at the time and spoke as passionately as I could in opposition to sending our marines to Beirut. I wish they had listened to me because 241 young marines would be alive today. But I exhausted my responsibilities at that time as a Member of Congress, just as, when we pass resolutions as to what the sense of this body is, we exhaust our responsibilities, as tragic as it may be. And the fact is, the President of the United States, Bill Clinton—although I obviously wish it were not Bill Clinton because I am of the opposite party—has that responsibility. It was given to him by the American people. And as long as he is Commander in Chief I intend to help him carry out his responsibilities, although I will closely monitor them. And if he goes wrong, I will take every constitutional action to try to prohibit further mistakes and further loss of American life.

Mr. President, I believe that there have been serious mistakes made. I have ventilated my views on this issue many times on this floor. But the fact is that the President of the United States is given the responsibility, the most grave responsibility of sending into harms way our greatest national treasure, our young men and women.

So, Mr. President, with all due respect to Senator SPECTER, whose knowledge of the Constitution I am deeply appreciative of, and whose impassioned interest on this issue and many other foreign policy issues has been a great service to this body and this country, I will seek to table the amendment.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Arizona for those comments. I understand his background as a naval pilot, and I appreciate the comments he has made about the authority of the President. But where we join issue, and where I disagree with him categorically—if I might have the Senator's attention because I would like to discuss this one point—is the point about prohibiting him from acting, which does bind him.

I agree with most of what Senator MCCAIN had to say. When he talks about the Cambodian situation, Congress did withdraw funds, but that was on bombing, which is very different when you have forces on the ground. So I think it would be impossible for the Congress realistically to stop ground forces once they were in Haiti, just as I think it was impossible for the Congress to stop ground forces in Vietnam, although there was much sentiment in this body and in the House against the Vietnam war.

When the Senator from Arizona says that the necessity exists for Executive action in cases of emergency if something unforeseen happens, I agree with him. I have tried to craft the exceptions very much as Senator GREGG did in an amendment which Senator MCCAIN approved cutting off funds. I believe he voted for that amendment.

Mr. MCCAIN. I say to my friend I voted against that.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Senator for the correction. I had thought he was with us on that.

But coming to the merits as to what he has argued, this prohibition would not apply under three specific circumstances. One of the circumstances is when the temporary deployment of forces of the United States into Haiti is necessary in order to protect or evacuate United States citizens from a situation of imminent danger. And a second exception would be when the deployment of forces into Haiti is vital to the national security interests of the United States and there is not sufficient time to seek and receive congressional authorization.

So I believe that on the face of this amendment there would be sufficient latitude for the President to act if there were an emergency.

The concern that I have is that if the President moves into Haiti after the House and the Senate have spoken, and there is no change in circumstance, there is really nothing left to the congressional authority to declare war and that when the Senator from Arizona says that legislative bodies cannot anticipate all the events in the world, I agree with him on that. But I think there is sufficient latitude here.

So the question on which I take issue with the Senator from Arizona and would like a specific view, is that where you agree that the Constitution gives the authority to the Congress to declare war, and where you agree that there should not be an invasion of Haiti on the merits, if there is no change in circumstance, why should not the Congress enter a prohibition?

Mr. MCCAIN. I say to my friend from Pennsylvania, the Constitution gives the Congress the right to declare war. It does not give the Congress of the United States the right to declare peace. It does not give the Congress of the United States the right to declare, prior to the President acting, that we cannot engage militarily. The President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces, can send forces into hostilities any place in the world, with the proviso that sooner or later—hopefully sooner—he should seek congressional approval.

That is my reading of the Constitution of the United States, as it was probably Thomas Jefferson's when he sent a naval task force to put down the Barbary pirates in 1801. Just as there were expeditions, in my view tragically, into Mexico on several occasions in pursuit of Pancho Villa. Just as there was another occupation of Haiti in the year 1915 that was planned to last for a few months, but unfortunately and tragically for all concerned, lasted until 1934.

There is a clear history, I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania, from the beginning of the origins of this country where military force has been used by the Commander in Chief of the United States without congressional approval. If Congress did not choose to exercise its constitutional responsibility, I cannot blame the President of the United States for that.

Mr. SPECTER. I have a followup question. I would appreciate it if the Senator from Arizona would be willing to answer on his time because my time is whittling down, and he has a fair amount left.

Where you say the Congress does not have the authority to declare peace, the thought crosses my mind that the Congress has the sole authority to declare war. And if the President gets us involved in a war in Haiti where Congress has had a chance to speak, authorize the use of force or to declare war and there is no change in circumstance, but the President does not consider it necessary to come to Congress to get authorization to invade and, therefore, to undertake a war, is not the President really usurping the sole congressional authority to declare war?

Mr. McCAIN. I will say to my friend, if the President gets us into Haiti militarily—and if the Washington Post is to be believed and other information we have, it is increasingly likely—then the Congress of the United States has the right to act at that time, according to my reading of the Constitution of the United States.

But the Congress of the United States, in my view, does not have the authority to act prospectively. Never in the history of the United States has the Congress prohibited the President from carrying out his responsibilities as Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces.

The Senator from Pennsylvania talks about interpretations of the Constitution. I would tell him that the history of the United States indicates time after time, from our earliest history, that the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces, has engaged militarily. If Congress has not shown the guts, in the case of the Vietnam war—where at one point an overwhelming public opinion was for an immediate withdrawal—to force that withdrawal, which they had the power to do, I cannot blame the President of the United States.

We cannot do anything but open a veritable Pandora's box if we somehow establish the precept and the concept that the Congress of the United States has a right to prohibit military action anyplace in the world. I think we would then see resolutions that the President cannot engage militarily in Africa, the President cannot engage in Bosnia.

I would love to not see the United States of America involved in Bosnia. And if I were President of the United States, I absolutely would not go militarily into Bosnia, I promise you that. But I am not the President of the United States.

Where the Senator and I disagree is where the American people and the Constitution of the United States has placed the responsibilities of the Commander in Chief of U.S. Armed Forces.

Now, they have given the right and the authority of Congress to cut off funds—the powers of the purse—but if the Congress of the United States does not choose to use that, then that is not the President's responsibility. Mr. President, I would like to yield 4 minutes to Senator PELL, from Rhode Island, if that is all right.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, if I may—

Mr. McCAIN. I am sorry, the Senator from Pennsylvania still has the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, just in response to what the Senator from Arizona has said. My interpretation is, from the thrust of our debate, that what he cited are circumstances totally different from what we have today in Haiti where Congress has expressed its view on the merits and has ample time.

The conclusion that I come to and submit to my colleagues is that if the conclusions of the Senator from Arizona are adopted and not mine, that there is nothing left of the congressional authority to declare war under the Constitution.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM). Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Let me say in response to the Senator from Pennsylvania, one, the Congress of the United States has the right to declare war. They can do that without any prompting from the President of the United States, although clearly that has not been the case at any time we have chosen to declare war in the past. I believe that the Senate of the United States has spoken as much and as strongly as it can given our constitutional responsibilities and that was the 100 to zero vote on the resolution by the Republican leader and Senator GREGG that the United Nations does not constitute Congressional authorization and other sense-of-the Congress resolutions that said we do not support an invasion of Haiti. And if the President invades Haiti and it turns out to be a debacle, I would be one of the first to come to the floor of this Senate, although I would not do so at the time when American lives are at risk, at least in the beginning, and seek a prohibition and a cutoff of funds for further military involvement in Haiti which I think is clearly within the responsibilities of the Congress.

I would like to yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, the gist of this amendment should be familiar to every Member of this body. The Senate has rejected similar amendments which would prohibit or restrict our Presidents' ability to deploy troops in Haiti three times. While I share the desire that the United States should not use force and have so advised our President, I do not believe we should be tying the hands of our President.

I very much hope and it is very much in the interest of the United States and the people of Haiti that the ruling junta leave voluntarily so that democracy can be restored. If that is to happen, however, the possibility of the use of force to remove the junta cannot be taken off the table or called into question. It is ironic, but true, that if military action is to be avoided, the threat of it is essential.

At this point, the President has decided that rather than using force, the United States should tighten sanctions and allow them time to work in the hope of avoiding military intervention. The United States and the United Nations are working to tighten the border along the Dominican and Haitian border. The United States is providing equipment and the United Nations will send observers to help the Dominican Government enforce the embargo. And, only a few days ago, the last commercial flight servicing Haiti left Port-au-Prince, heightening pressure on the coup leaders and their supporters.

If the pending amendment were to be enacted it would seriously undermine the administration's diplomacy which focused on persuading the illegal government in Haiti that it must go voluntarily. If the amendment were to pass, it would send the very damaging message that General Cedras and his cohorts would have nothing to fear from refusing to give up power, because the Congress would see to it that the threat of force is an empty one. Indeed, the rascal leaders in Port au Prince have interpreted similar amendments considered by this body as a sign that some in the Senate do not support democracy or human rights, but instead are on the side of the thugs who continue to rule through terror.

I am certain my colleagues would agree this is not the message that we ought to send either to the junta or the Haitian people who have suffered so much—too much in fact.

This is a very strong amendment, mandatory, and actually prohibits our President from taking the kinds of actions that Presidents have taken in the past.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment.

Mr. SPECTER. The question I have for the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee is the essential question. It is true that the President of the United States has engaged as Commander in Chief in many military operations historically, but there has never been an occasion like the one present where both bodies of the Congress have spoken as a matter of the sense-of-the-Senate, the sense-of-the House, in opposing on the merits the invasion of Haiti. If there is no change of circumstance, and there is ample time for the President to come to the Congress and get our authorization for the use of force or a declaration of war, and the President says that he does not feel mandated to do it, and all of this time has elapsed where we have been considering this for many months, what then is left of the congressional sole authority under the Constitution to declare war?

Mr. PELL. We have that right. As you know, we have not exercised it since 1941. And I think that we have that right, we can do that, but we see military actions taken without declaring war—Vietnam, Grenada, and so forth.

Mr. SPECTER. Well, my followup question would be where the Congress has the opportunity to declare war or authorize the use of force and withholds from doing so, does the President then have the authority to declare and to make war?

Mr. PELL. The President has the authority to make it de facto, not de jure, by his actions.

Mr. SPECTER. Well, I thank the chairman for that. If the Senator says that the President has the power to make it de facto, not de jure, I think that——

Mr. PELL. The Constitution gives it to the Congress de jure.

Mr. SPECTER. Right. But does the Senator think the President has the right to declare or make war de facto?

Mr. PELL. I do. He has waged war in the absence of a formal declaration several times.

Mr. SPECTER. Well, I think that underscores the necessity for this amendment to reassert the sole authority of the Congress of the United States to declare war.

I thank the Chair and yield. I thank my colleague from Rhode Island. I yield the floor.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The time is under the control of the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DOLE. How much time does the Senator from Pennsylvania have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has 10 minutes 6 seconds.

Mr. DOLE. I yield myself 5 minutes of his time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I first want to call attention to all my colleagues on both sides of this issue what I consider to be an excellent treatise by Louis Fisher, senior specialist in separation of powers, Congressional Research Service, Library of Congress dated August 1, 1994. I am going to put the entire document in the RECORD. For anybody on either side of this issue, I would certainly say this is recommended reading.

It will be presented to the American Political Science Association, New York Hilton, September 1 through 4, this coming month. Let me read just three short paragraphs.

THE KOREAN WAR: ON WHAT LEGAL BASIS DID TRUMAN ACT?

In June 1950, President Harry Truman ordered U.S. troops to Korea without first requesting congressional authority. For legal footing he cited resolutions passed by the United Nations Security Council, a beguiling but spurious source of authority. In 1990 the Bush administration tried the same tactic, relying on the Korean War as an acceptable precedent for taking offensive action against Iraq, again without seeking congressional approval. Like Truman, Bush claimed that UN resolutions were a sufficient base of authority. In Bosnia, President Clinton has relied on UN resolutions and NATO agreements as sufficient authority to military force without first seeking congressional approval.

UN machinery is not a legal substitute for congressional action. If that were possible, the President and the Senate, through treaty action, would strip from the House of Representative its constitutional role in deciding questions of war. Following that same logic, the President and the Senate, through the treaty process, could rely on the UN to determine trade and tariff matters, again bypassing the prerogatives of the House of Representatives. This history of the United Nations makes it very clear that all parties in the legislative and executive branches understood that the decision to use military force through the UN required prior approval from both Houses of Congress.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

The Versailles Treaty was defeated by the Senate in 1919 and again in 1920. The treaty failed in large part because a number of Senators insisted that any commitments of U.S. troops to a world body (the League of Nations) had to be first approved by Congress. On that issue, and others, President Wilson refused to yield.

I ask unanimous consent this treatise by Louis Fisher be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL RESEARCH SERVICE,
THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, August 1, 1994.

Senator ROBERT DOLE,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: UN Security Council Resolution 940 of July 31, 1994, authorizing military action against Haiti, raises the same issue that this country faced in 1950 when President Truman relied on a Security Council resolution to take military action against North Korea. The fundamental question: Is a Security Council resolution a legal substitute for explicit congressional approval?

In a paper to be presented next month at the American Political Science Association annual meeting, I conclude that Truman's action violated the Constitution and violated the UN Participation Act, which calls for congressional approval by bill or joint resolution. The UN Charter, entered into by a President and the Senate, was never a means of eliminating the constitutional role of the House of Representatives. In short, UN resolutions are not an appropriate or legal mechanism for circumventing Congress.

If I can be of any further assistance, please contact me at 707-8676.

THE KOREAN WAR: ON WHAT LEGAL BASIS DID TRUMAN ACT?

(By Louis Fisher, Congressional Research Service)

In June 1950, President Harry Truman ordered U.S. troops to Korea without first requesting congressional authority. For legal footing he cited resolutions passed by the United Nations Security Council, a beguiling but spurious source of authority. In 1990 the Bush administration tried the same tactic, relying on the Korean War as an acceptable precedent for taking offensive action against Iraq, again without seeking congressional approval. Like Truman, Bush claimed that UN resolutions were a sufficient base of authority. In Bosnia, President Clinton has relied on UN resolutions and NATO agreements as sufficient authority to use military force without first seeking congressional approval.

UN machinery is not a legal substitute for congressional action. If that were possible, the President and the Senate, through treaty action, could strip from the House of Representatives its constitutional role in deciding questions of war. Following that same logic, the President and the Senate, through the treaty process, could rely on the UN to determine trade and tariff matters, again bypassing the prerogatives of the House of Representatives. The history of the United Nations makes it very clear that all parties in the legislative and executive branches understand that the decision to use military force through the UN required prior approval from both Houses of Congress.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

The Versailles Treaty was defeated by the Senate in 1919 and again in 1920. The treaty failed in large part because a number of Senators insisted that any commitments of U.S. troops to a world body (the League of Nations) had to be first approved by Congress. On that issue, and others, President Wilson refused to yield.

President Wilson submitted the treaty to the Senate on July 10, 1919, attaching to it the Covenant of the League of Nations. The Covenant provided for an Assembly (giving each member nation an equal voice) and a Council (consisting of representatives from the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, and four other nations elected by the Assembly). Members pledged to submit to the League all disputes threatening war and to use military and economic sanctions against nations that threatened war. In an emotional address to the Senate, Wilson called the League of Nations a "practical necessity" and "indeed indispensable." He said that statesmen saw it as "the hope of the world. . . . Shall we or any other free people hesitate to accept this great duty? Dare we reject it and break the heart of the world?"[1] proposed a number of "reservations" to protect American interests. The second of fourteen reservations concerned the congressional prerogative to decide questions of war:

"The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide."[2]

Wilson opposed the Lodge reservations, claiming that they "cut out the heart of this Covenant" and represented "nullification" of the treaty.[3] Wilson's theory of the treaty process was a simple one: the President proposes, the Senate acquiesces. There was no room in his philosophy of government for independent Senate thinking or the offering of legislative amendments and reservations.

Wilson's attitude toward the Senate and presidential power had been revealed crisply in two books. In Congressional Government (1883), he advocated unilateral presidential negotiation with complete exclusion of the Senate. These executive initiatives would supposedly set to the country "into such scrapes, so pledged in the view of the world to certain courses of action, that the Senate hesitates to bring about the appearance of dishonor which would follow its refusal to ratify the rash promises or to support the indiscreet threats of the Department of State."[4] In Constitutional Government in the United States (1908), he reiterated the same line of argument:

"One of the greatest of the President's powers I have not yet spoken of at all: his control, which is very absolute, of the foreign relations of the nation. The initiative in foreign affairs, which the President possesses without any restriction whatever, is virtually the power to control them absolutely. The President cannot conclude a treaty with a foreign power without the consent of the Senate, but he may guide every step of diplomacy, and to guide diplomacy is to determine what treaties must be made, if the faith and prestige of the government are to be maintained. He need disclose no step of negotiation until it is complete, and when in any critical matter it is completed the government is virtually committed. Whatever its disinclination, the Senate may feel itself committed also."[5]

This legislative strategy, fully articulated in Wilson's writings, failed abysmally with the Treaty of Versailles. After excluding the Senate from the negotiating sessions, he tried to present Senators with a fait accompli. The result: a resounding political defeat for Wilson. He had never cultivated sufficient support among Senators to have his handiwork approved. The treaty was rejected in November 1919 and again in March 1920. Wilson appealed to the public in an exhausting campaign across the country, leading to his physical and emotional collapse. The dismal experience of a President's "going it alone" would remain seared in the nation's memory, casting a shadow over future efforts to create the United Nations.

CREATING THE U.N. CHARTER

America's entry into a world organization was revived in 1943 through a series of methodical steps: the Ball Resolution, the Connally and Fulbright Resolutions, and the Moscow Declaration. Those actions were followed by meetings at Dumbarton Oaks in 1944 and in San Francisco in 1945. The issue of which branch takes the nation to war—Congress or the President—was ignored at some of these meetings and addressed at others. The predominant view required prior authorization by Congress (both Houses) of any commitment of U.S. forces to the United Nations.

On March 16, 1943, Senator Joseph Hurst Ball (R-Minn.) introduced a resolution calling for the formation of the United Nations. He was joined by Senators Lister Hill (D-Ala.), Harold Burton (R-Ohio), and Carl Hatch (D-N.M.). The bipartisan nature of this resolution commanded respectful attention. Senator Ball said that the "whole world, and our allies, know today that it is the United States Senate which will finally decide what will be the foreign policy of our country when the war ends." He noted that the Senate's constitutional power in the past had been used "negatively," reminding listeners of the rejection of the Treaty of Versailles. Senator Ball hoped that the decision on the United Nations would not become embroiled in partisan politics.[6] Senate debate on the Ball Resolution said nothing about which branch of government would commit U.S. troops.

On the day that Ball introduction his resolution, Walter Lippman wrote an article on the Senate's role in giving advice and consent to treaties. Lippman had long been identified as a defender of foreign policy by elites and executive officials. In an article published in the Washington Post, he now urged that President Wilson's mistake with the Treaty of Versailles not be repeated. Ways and means had to be found of "enabling the Senate to participate in the negotiations."[7]

On September 20, the House debated a resolution introduced by Senator J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.) to support the concept of a United Nations. The language was exceedingly brief:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress hereby expresses itself as favoring the creation of appropriate international machinery with power adequate to establish and to maintain a just and lasting peace, among the nations of the world, and as favoring the participation by the United States therein."[8]

Congressman Hamilton Fish, Jr. (R-N.Y.) proposed that Fulbright's resolution end with the language "favoring participation by the United States therein through its constitutional processes."[9] He explained that the additional language meant that any commitment to join the United Nations, made either by agreement or by treaty "must go through in a constitutional way, either by a two-thirds vote of the Senate or by the approval of the entire Congress."[10] He warned that a number of Members of Congress were prepared to oppose the Fulbright Resolution because they "are afraid that some secret commitments will be entered into and that the Congress will be by-passed, and that the Constitution will be ignored."[11]

The House passed the Fulbright resolution, as introduced, 252 to 23.[12] The following day it voted again, after adding the language "through its constitutional processes," and this time the margin was 360 to 29.[13] The House action sharply challenged the Senate's presumed monopoly to define foreign policy for the legislative branch. The debate pointed out that both Houses acted on the declaration of war for World War II, voted funds to sustain it, and conscripted American soldiers to fight the battles.[14] Recalling the Senate's role in rejecting the Treaty of Versailles, Congressman Mike Monroney (D-Okla.) said he was "unwilling to surrender to 33 Members of the Senate, one-third of that body, the life or death veto over the security of future generations of Americans."[15]

The Senate ignored the Fulbright Resolution, which had been introduced as a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 25) and therefore needed concurrence by the Senate. Instead, the Senate considered a resolution (S. Res. 192) requiring only its own action. Debate on this resolution, called the Connally Resolution, stretched from October 25 through November 5. Similar to the House, it included the phrase "through its constitutional processes" to prevent the President from joining the United Nations without explicit congressional support.[16] Congressional processes meant the "powers of Congress"—both Houses, not just the Senate.[17] A few Senators thought of congressional action solely through the treaty process, excluding the House[18] The majority recognized that international commitments (in this case joining the United Nations) could be made either by treaty or by a majority of each House voting on a bill or joint resolution.[19]

The final version of the Connally Resolution, approved 85 to 5, provides that the United States, "acting through its constitutional processes," joins in the establishment of an international authority with power to prevent aggression. The final paragraph states that any treaty made to effect the purposes of the resolution shall be made only with the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senate.[20] Senator Robert Taft (R-Ohio) said that the requirement for Senate action was added because of the fear that the President "has shown some indications of a desire to do by executive agreement things which certainly in my opinion ought to be the subject of a treaty."[21]

Little was said during this lengthy Senate debate about congressional controls over the use of American troops in a UN action. Senator Claude Pepper (D-Fla.) opposed any delegation of Congress' war-declaring power to an international body, but believed that it would be permissible for American troops to be used, without prior congressional approval, as a "police force" to combat aggression in small wars.[22] The notion of a "police action" would be later used by President Truman as a legal pretext for going to war in Korea without congressional approval. Truman was a member of the Senate at the time Pepper made that remark.

Senate action on the Connally Resolution occurred during a four-nation conference that endorsed an international peacekeeping organization. On October 30, 1943, the United States, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, and China issued the Moscow Declaration, setting forth a number of guiding principles. The declaration recognized "the necessity of establishing at the earliest practicable date a general international organization . . . . for the maintenance of international peace and security."

Those same nations met a year later at Dumbarton Oaks, in Washington, D.C., to give further definition to the international organization. Legal specialists who monitored these meetings speculated on the procedures for going to war. Edwin Borchard surmised: "Constitutionally, the plan seems to assume that the President, or his delegate, without consulting Congress, the war-making and declaring authority, can vote for the use of the American quota of armed forces, if that can be limited when the 'aggressor' resists."[23] Two weeks after the end of the conference at Dumbarton Oaks, President Roosevelt delivered an address in which he indicated the need for advance congressional approval:

"The Council of the United Nations must have the power to act quickly and decisively to keep the peace by force, if necessary. A policeman would not be a very effective policeman if, when he saw a felon break into a house, he had to go to the town hall and call a town meeting to issue a warrant before the felon could be arrested.

"It is clear that, if the world organization is to have any reality at all, our representatives must be endowed in advance by the people themselves, by constitutional means through their representatives in the Congress, with authority to act."[24]

After Roosevelt's death, Borchard learned that President Truman had sent a cable from Potsdam stating that all agreements involving U.S. troop commitments to the UN would first have to be approved by both Houses of Congress.[25] Borchard believed that the Constitution required approval by both Houses and not merely the Senate.[26]

Another perspective appeared in a letter to The New York Times. Six specialists of international law analyzed the President's authority to contribute troops to the UN. They recognized the risks for congressional prerogatives: "It is doubtless true that Congress feel a certain hesitancy in permitting the President, acting through the Security Council, to engage even a small policing force in international action because it will fear that this might commit the United States to further military action and thus might impair the discretion of Congress in respect to engagement in 'war.'" Yet they suggested that Presidents in the past had broad discretion in the use of military force, frequently acting without explicit congressional authority. The American constitutional system, they said, relied heavily on good-faith actions and sensitive political judgment by the President: "Congress has always been dependent upon the good faith of the President in calling upon it when the situation was so serious that a large-scale use of force may be necessary."[27]

The meetings at Dumbarton Oaks were followed by a conference in San Francisco in 1945, attended by fifty nations and lasting nine weeks. Unlike Wilson's futile strategy for the Versailles Treaty, half of the eight members of the U.S. delegation came from Congress: Senators Tom Connally (D-Tex.) and Arthur H. Vandenberg (R-Mich.) and Representatives Sol Bloom (D-N.Y.) and Charles A. Eaton (R-N.J.).[28] John Foster Dulles, later to be Secretary of State under President Eisenhower, told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in 1945 that, in the past, he had "some doubts as to the wisdom of Senators participating in the negotiation of treaties." After his experience at the San Francisco conference, he said those doubts "were dispelled."[29]

Out of the San Francisco conference came the United Nations Charter, which was submitted to the Senate for its approval. The UN consisted of a General Assembly (representing all member states), a Security Council (eleven members, including China, France, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and the United States as permanent members), a Secretariat, an International Court of Justice, and specialized councils. Chapter VII of the Charter dealt with UN responses to threats of peace, breaches of the peace, and acts of aggression. Procedures were established to permit the UN to employ military force to deal with these threats. All UN members would make available to the Security Council, "on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements," armed forces and other assistance for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security. The agreements were to be concluded between the Security Council and members states and "shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes." Thus, the decision of who would grant that approval in the United States—Congress, the President, or the two branches acting jointly—was deliberately deferred. Each nation would determine for itself the "constitutional processes" to be followed.

From July 9 to July 13, 1945, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee held hearings on the Charter. Leo Pasvolsky, a Special Assistant to the Secretary of State, was asked whether Congress would have ultimate control over the special agreements to use armed force. Pasvolsky replied: "That is a domestic question which I am afraid I cannot answer."[30] Senator Vandenberg volunteered that, in his opinion, the President would not need "the consent of Congress to every use of our armed forces."[31]

John Foster Dulles, an adviser to the U.S. delegation at San Francisco, testified that the procedure for special agreements would need the approval of the Senate and could not be done unilaterally by the President.[32] Dulles elaborated: "It is clearly my view, and it was the view of the entire United States delegation, that the agreement which will provide for the United States military contingent will have to be negotiated and then submitted to the Senate for ratification in the same way as a treaty." Senator Connally agreed with that interpretation.[33] When Senator Walter F. George (D-Ga.) suggested that congressional approval could be by statute, involving both Houses, Dulles disagreed: "The procedure will be by treaty—agreements submitted to the Senate for ratification."[34] Senator Eugene Millikin (R-Colo.) tried to distinguish between "policing powers" (to be exercised exclusively by the President) and "real war problems" (reserved for congressional action).[35] Dulles agreed with that concept: "If we are talking about a little bit of force necessary to be used as a police demonstration, that is the sort of thing that the President of the United States has done without concurrence by Congress since this Nation was founded."[36]

During floor debate, Senator Scott Lucus (D-Ill.) took sharp exception to Dulles' contention that special agreements would come back to Congress as treaties to be disposed of solely by the Senate. Such agreements, Lucas said, required action by both Houses. He cited constitutional passages giving to the entire Congress powers to raise and support armies and to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.[37] Of course action by both Houses is required to declare war and to appropriate funds for the military. A number of Senators agreed with Lucas in rejecting the proposition advanced by Dulles.[38]

As the debate continued, Senator Vandenberg called Dulles to clarify his position. Dulles explained that when the issue came up in the hearings, he thought the question was between unilateral action by the President (through executive agreements) or retaining congressional control (which Dulles took to mean action on treaties). The central point he tried to make, Dulles said, was that "the use of force cannot be made by exclusive Presidential authority through an executive agreement." He was positive about that. On the other issue—whether Congress should act by treaty or by joint resolution—he was less certain.[39]

At other points in the debate, Senator Harlan Bushfield (R-S.D.) said he had objected "and I still object, to a delegation of power to one man or to the Security Council, composed of 10 foreigners and 1 American, to declare war and to take American boys into war." Such a proposal "is in direct violation of the Constitution." Congress did not have the power, Bushfield said, "to make such a delegation even if we desired to do so."[40] Senator Burton Wheeler (D-Mont.) was also emphatic on that point:

"If it is to be contended that if we enter into this treaty we take the power away from the Congress, and the President can send troops all over the world to fight battles anywhere, if it is to be said that that is to be the policy of this country, I say that the American people will never support any Senator or any Representative who advocates such a policy; and make no mistake about it."[41]

President Truman, aware of the Senate debate on which branch controlled the sending of armed forces to the UN, wired a note to Senator McKellar on July 27, 1945, from Potsdam. Truman pledged: "When any such agreement or agreements are negotiated it will be my purpose to ask the Congress for appropriate legislation to approve them."[42] In asking "Congress" for legislation, Senators understood that Congress "consists not alone of the Senate but of the two Houses."[43] With that understanding, the Senate approved the UN Charter by a vote of 89 to 2.[44]

Having approved the Charter, Congress now had to pass additional legislation to implement it and to determine the precise mechanisms for the use of force. The specific procedures, brought into conformity with "constitutional processes," are included in the UN Participation Act of 1945.

THE UN PARTICIPATION ACT

Nothing in the passage of the Fulbright and Connally Resolutions or the history of the UN Charter supports the notion that Congress, by endorsing the structure of the United Nations as an international peacekeeping body, altered the Constitution by reading itself out of the war-making power. Congress did not—it could not—do that. That conclusion is driven home even more sharply by the legislative history of the UN Participation Act.

Under the provisions of the UN Charter, in the event of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression, the UN Security Council may decide under Article 41 of the UN Charter to recommend "measures not involving the use of armed force." If those measures prove inadequate, Article 43 provides that all UN members shall make available to the Security Council—in accordance with special agreements—armed forces and other assistance. These agreements would spell out the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided. It was anticipated that each nation would ratify these agreements "in accordance with their respective constitutional processes."

The meaning of constitutional processes is defined by Section 6 of the UN Participation Act of 1945. Without the slightest ambiguity, this statute requires that the agreements "shall be subject to the approval of the Congress by appropriate Act or joint resolution." Statutory language could not be more clear. The President must seek congressional approval in advance. Two qualifications are included in Section 6:

The President shall not be deemed to require the authorization of the Congress to make available to the Security Council on its call in order to take action under Article 42 of said Charter and pursuant to such special agreement or agreements the armed forces, facilities, or assistance provided therein: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as an authorization to the President by the Congress to make available to the Security Council for such purpose armed forces, facilities, or assistance in addition to the forces, facilities, and assistance provided for in such special agreements or agreements."[45]

The first qualification states that once the President receives the approval of Congress for a special agreement, he does not need subsequent approval from Congress to provide military assistance under Article 42 (under which the Security Council determines that peaceful means are inadequate and military action is necessary). Congressional approval is needed for the special agreement, not subsequent implementations of that agreement. The second qualification clarifies that nothing in the UN Participation Act is to be construed as congressional approval of other agreements entered into by the President.

Thus, the qualifications do not eliminate the need for congressional approval. Presidents could commit armed forces to the UN only after Congress gave its explicit consent. That point is crucial. The League of Nations Covenant foundered precisely on the issue of needing congressional approval before using armed force. The framers of the UN Charter knew of that history and very consciously included protections for congressional prerogatives.[46]

The legislative history of the UN Participation Act reinforces the need for advance congressional approval. In his appearance before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Under Secretary of State Dean Acheson explained that only after the President receives the approval of Congress is he "bound to furnish that contingent of troops to the Security Council; and the President is not authorized to furnish any more than you have approved of in that agreement."[47] When Congresswoman Edith Rogers remarked that Congress "can easily control the [Security] Council," Acheson agreed unequivocally: "It is entirely within the wisdom of Congress to approve or disapprove whatever special agreement the President negotiates."[48] Congressman John Kee wondered whether the qualifications in Section 6 of the UN Participation Act permitted the President to provide military assistance to the Security Council without consulting or submitting the matter to Congress. Acheson firmly rejected that possibility. No special agreement, Acheson said, could have any "force or effect" until Congress approved:

"This is an important question of Judge Kee, and may I state his question and my answer so that it will be quite clear here: The judge asks whether the language beginning on line 19 of page 5, which says the President shall not be deemed to require the authorization of Congress to make available to the Security Council on its call in order to take action under article 42 of the Charter, means that the President may provide these forces prior to the time when any special agreement has been approved by Congress.

"The answer to that question is "No," that the President may not do that, that such special agreements refer to the special agreement which shall be subject to the approval of the Congress, so that until the special agreement has been negotiated and approved by the Congress, it has no force and effect."[49]

Other parts of the legislative history support this understanding. In reporting the UN Participation Act, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee anticipated a shared, coequal relationship between the President and Congress:

"Although the ratification of the Charter resulted in the vesting in the executive branch of the power and obligation to fulfill the commitments assumed by the United States thereunder, the Congress must be taken into close partnership and must be fully advised of all phases of our participation in this enterprise. The Congress will be asked annually to appropriate funds to support the United Nations budget and for the expenses of our representation. It will be called upon to approve arrangements for the supply of armed forces to the Security Council and thereafter to make appropriations for the maintenance of such forces."[50]

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee further noted that "all were agreed on the basic proposition that the military agreements could not be entered into solely by executive action."[51] Nevertheless, during floor debate, Senators Connally and Taft agreed that in "certain emergencies" the President and the Security Council might be able to act without first obtaining authority from Congress.[52] These comments are interesting, but they do not change the statutory requirement that special agreements be approved in advance by "appropriate Act or joint resolution." Moreover, Connally and Taft seemed to be laboring under concepts left over from the San Francisco conference and the Senate debate over the UN Charter. They were endorsing the President's ability to become engaged in "police actions" without any congressional involvement.

Connally's confusion is evident a few pages later where he agrees with Senator Kenneth Wherry (R-Neb.) that special agreements could be made by treaty.[53] That misinterpretation, originally pushed by John Foster Dulles and others, was explicitly corrected by the language in Section 6 of the UN Participation Act. Later, an amendment was offered in the Senate to authorize the President to negotiate a special agreement with the Security Council solely with the support of two-thirds of the Senate.[54] Senator Vandenberg opposed the amendment on these grounds:

"If we go to war, a majority of the House and Senate puts us into war. . . . The House has equal responsibility with the Senate in respect of raising armies and supporting and sustaining them. The House has primary jurisdiction over the taxation necessities involved in supporting and sustaining armies and navies, and in maintaining national defense.

". . . [The Senate Foreign Relations Committee] chose to place the ratification of that contract in the hands of both Houses of Congress, inasmuch as the total Congress of the United States must deal with all the consequences which are involved either if we have a war or if we succeeded in preventing one. . . ."[55]

Vandenberg's reasoning prevailed. The great majority of Senators recognized that the decision to go to war must be made by both Houses of Congress. The amendment was defeated decisively, 57 to 14.[56]

The House of Representatives also designed the UN Participation Act to protect congressional prerogatives over war and peace. In reporting the bill, the House Foreign Affairs Committee drew attention to the vote in the Senate rejecting the idea that special agreements could be handled solely by the Senate through the treaty process. The Committee "believes that it is eminently appropriate that the Congress as a whole pass upon these agreements under the constitutional powers of the Congress."[57] During floor debate, Congressman Sol Bloom, one of the delegates at the San Francisco conference, underscored that point:

"The position of the Congress is fully protected by the requirement that the military agreement to preserve the peace must be passed upon by Congress before it becomes effective. Also, the obligation of the United States to make forces available to the Security Council does not become effective until the special agreement has been passed upon by Congress."[58]

The restrictions on the President's power under Section 6 to use armed force were clarified by amendments adopted in 1949, allowing the President on his own initiative to provide military forces to the United Nations for "cooperative action." However, presidential discretion to deploy these forces are subject to stringent conditions: they could serve only as observers and guards, could perform only in a noncombatant capacity, and could not exceed one thousand.[59] Moreover, in providing these troops in the UN the President shall assure that they not involve "the employment of armed forces contemplated by chapter VII of the United Nations Charter."[60] Clearly, there was no opportunity in the UN Participation Act or its amendments for unilateral military action by the President.

THE KOREAN WAR

With these safeguards supposedly in place to protect congressional prerogatives, on June 26, 1950, President Truman announced to the American public that he had conferred with the Secretaries of State and Defense, their senior advisers, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff "about the situation in the Far East created by unprovoked aggression against the Republic of Korea."[61] He said that the UN Security Council had acted to order a withdrawal of the invading forces to positions north of the 38th parallel, and that, "[i]n accordance with the resolution of the Security Council, the United States will vigorously support the effort of the Council to terminate this serious breach of the peace."[62] At that point, he made no commitment of U.S. military forces.

On the next day, however, President Truman announced that North Korea had failed to cease hostilities and to withdraw to the 38th parallel. He summarized the UN action in this manner:

"The Security Council called upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution. In these circumstance I have ordered United States air and sea forces to give the [South] Korean Government troops cover and support."[63]

In addition to this argument, Truman said that "the occupation of Formosa by Communist forces would be a direct threat to the security of the Pacific area and to United States forces performing their lawful and necessary functions in that area."[64] Finally, he advised that all members of the United Nations "will consider carefully" the consequences of Korea's aggression "in defiance of the Charter of the United Nations" and that a "return to the rule of force in international affairs" would have far-reaching effects. The United States, he said, "will continue to uphold the rule of law."[65]

In fact, Truman violated the unambiguous statutory language and legislative history of the UN Participation Act. How could he pretend to act militarily in Korea under the UN umbrella without any congressional approval? The short answer is that he ignored the special agreements that were the vehicle for assuring congressional approval in advance of any military action by the President. With the Soviet Union absent, the Security Council voted 9 to 0 to call upon North Korea to cease hostilities and to withdraw their forces. Two days later the Council requested military assistance from UN members to repel the attack, but by that time Truman had already ordered U.S. air and sea forces to assist South Korea.

Truman's legal authority was non-existent for two reasons. First, it cannot be argued that the President's constitutional powers vary with the presence or absence of Soviet delegates to the Security Council. As Robert Bork noted in 1971, "the approval of the United Nations was obtained only because the Soviet Union happened to be boycotting the Security Council at the time, and the President's Constitutional powers can hardly be said to ebb and flow with the veto of the Soviet Union in the Security Council."[66]

Second, the Truman administration did not act pursuant to UN authority, even though it strained to make that case. On June 29, 1950, Secretary of State Acheson claimed that all U.S. actions taken in Korea "have been under the aegis of the United Nations."[67] Aegis is a fudge word, meaning shield or protection. Acheson was using it to suggest that the United States was acting under the legal banner of the United Nations, which of course was not the case.

Acheson falsely claimed that Truman had done his "utmost to uphold the sanctity of the Charter of the United Nations and the rule of law," and that the administration was in "conformity with the resolutions of the Security Council of June 25 and 27 giving air and sea support to the troops of the Korean government."[68] Yet Truman committed U.S. forces before the Council called for military action. General MacArthur was immediately authorized to send supplies of ammunition to the South Korean defenders. On June 26, Truman ordered U.S. air and sea forces to give South Koreans cover and support.[69] After Acheson summarized the military situation for some members of Congress at noon on June 27, President Truman exclaimed: "But Dean, you didn't even mention the U.N.!"[70] Later that evening the Security Council passed the second resolution. In his memoirs, Acheson admitted that "some American action, said to be in support of the resolution of June 27, was in fact ordered, and possibly taken, prior to the resolution."[71] After he left the presidency, Truman was asked whether he was prepared to use military force in Korea without UN backing. He replied, with customary bluntness: "No question about it."[72]

On June 29, at a news conference, Truman was asked whether the United States was at war. His response: "We are not at war."[73] He was asked whether it would be more correct to call the conflict "a police action under the United Nations." He agreed with that language: "That is exactly what it amounts to."[74] The UN exercised no real authority over the conduct of the war. Other than token support from a few nations, it was an American war. The Security Council requested the United States to designate the commander of the forces and authorized the "unified command at its discretion to use the United Nations flag."[75] Truman designated Gen. Douglas MacArthur to serve as commander of this so-called unified command.[76] Measured by troops, money, casualties, and deaths, it remained an American war.

As to the distinction between police actions and wars, federal courts had no difficulty in defining the hostilities in Korea as war. A federal district court noted in 1953: "We doubt very much if there is any question in the minds of the majority of the people of this country that the conflict now raging in Korea can be anything but war."[77] During Senate hearings in June 1951, Secretary of State Acheson conceded the obvious by admitting "in the usual sense of the word there is a war."[78]

Truman violated constitutional and statutory requirements in part because of his mistaken reading of history. In deciding whether North Korean aggression could go unanswered, he looked, in his own lifetime, to Japan's invasion of Manchuria and Germany's reoccupation of the Rhineland. He did not consider other historical parallels where force is used, such as the American Civil War or with nineteenth-century efforts in Germany for unification. It did not occur to him that the situation in Korea resembled the latter more than it did Manchuria and the Rhineland.[79]

Even if a case could be made that the emergency facing Truman in June 1950 required him to act promptly without first seeking and obtaining legislative authority, nothing prevented him from returning to Congress and asking for a supporting statute or retroactive authority. John Norton Moore has made this point: "As to the suddenness of Korea, and conflicts like Korea, I would argue that the President should have the authority to meet the attack as necessary but should immediately seek congressional authorization."[80] I would put it a little differently. In a genuine emergency a President may act without congressional authority (and without express legal or constitutional authority), trusting that the circumstances are so urgent and compelling that Congress will endorse his actions and confer a legitimacy that only Congress, as the people's representatives, can provide.

POLITICAL REPERCUSSIONS

Congress was largely passive to Truman's usurpation of the war power. Some members offered the weak justification that "history will show that on more than 100 occasions in the life of this Republic the President as Commander in Chief has ordered the fleet or the troops to do certain things which involved the risk of war [without seeking congressional consent]."[81] This list of alleged precedents for unilateral presidential action contains not a single military adventure that even comes close to the magnitude of the Korean War. As Edward S. Corwin noted, the list consists largely of "fights with pirates, landings of small naval contingents on barbarous or semi-barbarous coasts, the dispatch of small bodies of troops to chase bandits or cattle rustlers across the Mexican border, and the life."[82]

A few legislators insisted that Truman should have gone to Congress for authority first.[83] Congressman Vito Marcantonio (ALP–N.Y.) delivered this indictment: "when we agreed to the United Nations Charter we never agreed to supplant our Constitution with the United Nations Charter. The power to declare and make war is vested in the representatives of the people, in the Congress of the United States."[84]

Senator Taft warned that if the President could intervene in Korea "without congressional approval, he can go to war in Malaya or Indonesia or Iran or South America." Taft conceded that U.S. entry into the United Nations created a new framework, "but I do not think it justifies the President's present action without approval by Congress." Taft referred to Section 6 of the UN Participation Act, noting that no special agreement had ever been negotiated by the Truman administration and submitted to Congress for its approval.[35]

Almost a year after the war began, a number of Senators participated in a lengthy debate that thoroughly shredded the administration's legal pretenses. Truman's commitment of troops to Korea violated the UN Charter, the UN Participation Act, and repeated assurances given to Congress by Acheson and other executive officials. Truman used military force before the second Security Council resolution. It was a war, not a police action. It was an American, not a UN, operation. On all those points the record is abundantly clear.[36]

Just as the Vietnam War spelled defeat for the Democrats in 1968, so did the Korean War help put an end to twenty years of Democratic control of the White House. "Korea, not crooks or Communists, was the major concern of the voters," writes Stephen Ambrose.[87] The high point of the 1952 campaign came on October 24, less than two weeks before the election, when Dwight D. Eisenhower announced that he would "go to Korea" to end the war.[88] Two authors of a study on Eisenhower described the crucial influence of the Korean War: "Dissatisfaction with the war destroyed Truman's popularity and had much to do with Eisenhower's emphatic victory in the election of 1952."[89]

Some leading academics, after rushing to Truman's support, later regretted their failure to give proper attention to constitutional principles. Henry Steele Commager, a prominent historian, was quick to defend Truman. Writing for The New York Times on January 14, 1951, Commager blithely remarked that the objections to Truman's unilateral actions "have no support in law or in history."[90] His own research into law and history, on this point, was superficial and misinformed. Consider this reasoning by Commager:

". . . it is an elementary fact that must never be lost sight of that treaties are laws and carry with them the same obligation as laws. When the Congress passed the United Nations Participation Act it made the obligations of the Charter of the United Nations law, binding on the President. When the Senate ratified the North Atlantic Treaty it made the obligations of that treaty law, binding on the President.

"Both of these famous documents require action by the United States which must, in the nature of the case, be left to a large extent to the discretion of the Executive. . . .[91]"

Commager not only overstated the President's power under mutual defense treaties but ignored, totally, the statutory text and legislative history of the UN Participation Act.

Arthur S. Schlesinger, Jr. was also an early defender of Truman's action in Korea. In a letter to The New York Times on January 9, 1951, he disputed the statement by Senator Taft that President Truman "had no authority whatever to commit American troops to Korea without consulting Congress and without Congressional approval" and that by sending troops to Korea he "simply usurped authority, in violation of the laws and the Constitution." Schlesinger said that Taft's statements "are demonstrably irresponsible." Harkening back to Jefferson's use of ships to repel the Barbary pirates, Schlesinger claimed that American Presidents "have repeatedly committed American armed forces abroad without prior Congressional consultation or approval."[92]

Schlesinger neglected to point out that Jefferson told Congress he was "[u]nauthorized by the Constitution, without the sanction of Congress, to go beyond the line of defense." It was the prerogative of Congress to authorize "measures of offense also."[93] Schlesinger did not cite, nor could he, a presidential initiative of the magnitude of the Korean War. Years later he expressed regret that, in calling Taft's statement "demonstrably irresponsible," he had responded with "a flourish of historical documentation and, alas, hyperbole."[94]

Edward S. Corwin took Commager and Schlesinger to task by labeling them the "high-flying prerogative men."[95] However, Corwin himself had been careless in earlier publications in describing the scope of presidential war power. Writing in 1949, he said that the original grant of authority to the President to "repel sudden attacks" had developed into an "undefined power—almost unchallenged from the first and occasionally sanctified judicially—to employ without Congressional authorization the armed forces in the protection of American rights and interests abroad whenever necessary."[96] He did note the significance of the UN Participation Act, which is said was based on the theory that American participation in the United Nations "is a matter for Congressional collaboration."[97]

By the late 1960s, with the nation mired in a bitter war in Vietnam, Commager and Schlesinger publicly apologized for their earlier unreserved endorsements of presidential war power. By 1966 Schlesinger was counseling that "something must be done to assure the Congress a more authoritative and continuing voice in fundamental decisions in foreign policy."[98] In 1973 Schlesinger stated that the "idea of prerogative was not part of presidential powers as defined by the Constitution," although it "remained in the back of [the framers'] mind."[99] Commager told the Senate in 1967 that there should be a reconsideration of executive-legislative relations in the conduct of foreign relations.[100] Testifying in 1971, Commager appealed for stronger legislative checks on presidential war powers.[101]

CONCLUSIONS

President Truman's unilateral use of armed force in Korea violated the U.S. Constitution and the UN Participation Act of 1945. It is not a valid precedent for what President Bush planned to do in 1990–91, against Iraq, nor is it a valid precedent for any military operations that President Clinton would want to launch in Bosnia or other UN "peacekeeping" operations. The decision to place U.S. troops in combat and to take the nation from a condition of peace to a state of war requires approval by Congress in advance. That was the constitutional principle in 1787. It has not changed today.

Presidents and their advisers point to more than 200 incidents in which Presidents have used force abroad without first obtaining congressional approval. Most of those actions were minor adventures done in the name of protecting American lives or property, taken at a time when U.S. intervention in neighboring countries was considered routine and proper. Is the bombardment of Greytown, Nicaragua, in 1854 an acceptable "precedent" for the current use of American military power? Are we comfortable with citing America's occupation of Haiti from 1915 to 1934 or the repeated interventions in Nicaragua from 1909 to 1933? Today, such invasions would violate international law and regional treaties. We should not speak nonchalantly about "more than 200 precedents," assuming that such numbers, by themselves, justify unilateral military action by the President. We need to examine the specific incidents. Are they attractive precedents for the use of force today? None of the two hundred incidents come close to justifying military actions of the magnitude and risk of Korea in 1950, Panama in 1989, Iraq in 1990, or Bosnia in 1994.

The Korean War stands as the most dangerous precedent because of its scope and the acquiescence of Congress. In recognizing the importance of the Korean War and its threat to constitutional democracy, we should not attempt to confer legitimacy to an illegitimate act. Illegal and unconstitutional actions, no matter how often repeated, do not build a lawful foundation. If Presidents withdrew funds from the Treasury without an appropriation from Congress, those actions would have no constitutional legitimacy, regardless of the number of infractions. As Gerhard Casper has remarked: "unconstitutional practices cannot become legitimate by the mere lapse of time."[102] Justice Frankfurter noted: "Illegality cannot attain legitimacy through practice."[103] Presidential acts of war, including Truman's initiative in Korea, can never be accepted as constitutional or as a legal substitute for congressional approval.

Mr. DOLE. The treaty was never ratified.

Mr. President, having said that, this is essentially the same amendment that was defeated in the Senate by a vote of 65 to 34 on June 29, 1994. I am not certain that bringing up the issue again with the same outcome likely sends the right signal to the White House because we read in this morning's paper—at least it hints—that the President will wait until we are in recess before there is any action. We read that he may not have seriously engaged the question and has not really focused on it himself.

The President has indicated he does not want, nor needs, congressional authorization. He said that in his press conference the other night. I happen to believe that is a mistake. If President Clinton made his case for the use of force, and if Congress authorized the use of force, I believe President Clinton's hand would be strengthened just as President Bush's hand was strengthened when he in effect rolled the dice and came to Congress and asked for our support for offensive military action in Iraq.

The best way for the administration to show the United States is serious would be the affirmative Congress authorizing the use of force in Haiti. The Congress should have a role to play.

It is a little odd that the administration goes to the United Nations and ignores the Congress. There is the argument made the other day that the Senator from Arizona has already referred to in this amendment. It passed by a vote of 100 to 0. We indicated at that time, every Senator, that U.N. authorization certainly is not authorization by Congress or the American people.

It is a little odd that Argentina has decided not to participate in the invasion precisely because of opposition from the Argentine Congress. Their Congress said no. They are pulling out.

So apparently they are going to bypass our Congress. That seems the President's attitude at the White House.

There should be no mistake at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue if this amendment is defeated. It does not mean the Congress does not have a role to play, and Congress should play a role. There is no emergency in Haiti.

The President has plenty of time to come up here right now and say, "OK. I want to get authorization from Congress." But he has to make his case to the American people first. If he cannot make it to the American people, he certainly is not going to make it effectively to the Congress of the United States So the President ought to come up here and try to make his case.

I think Roll Call, a little newspaper here on Capitol Hill, had a good editorial on August 4, which I also want to include in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HAITI VOTE NOW

White House officials tell us that President Clinton is undergoing an "excruciating" process of deciding whether to seek Congressional authorization for an invasion of Haiti. His aides are divided, the officials say, with some fearing Congress will deny permission and undercut Clinton's effort to scare the illegitimate military government into abdicating, others arguing that putting the issue to Congress will create a bad precedent narrowing the powers of the Commander-in-Chief, and still others (apparently a minority) advising that a Congressional vote is the right thing to do, politically and constitutionally.

We strongly urge the President to listen to this last group, and we strongly urge Congressional leaders to insist that Clinton seek proper authorization if he decides on an invasion. We render no opinion on the invasion idea itself, but we think it's vital that Congress be restored to its proper constitutional role in deciding whether the United States goes to war.

During the Cold War era, it came to be accepted practice that presidents would commit US troops abroad without a declaration of war or other formal authorization. In some cases where quick action is necessary, this will continue to be the case—as it was prior to the Cold War. But a Haiti invasion, if it occurs, will take place in the new post-Cold War era, and now is the right time to make certain that in this new world, Congress is no longer left out of the process.

The basic principle is simple: If the president decides that military action is required to secure some desired foreign policy purpose, and time is not of the essence, he ought to have to secure Congress' permission for it. This is what President Bush did with the Persian Gulf war, and it's generally agreed that the debate preceding the authorization vote was one of the US government's finest hours in recent history.

If President Clinton is worried that Congress will deny him authorization for an invasion of Haiti, this is all the more reason he needs to seek it. Congress usually supports a president when he takes decisive action overseas, so doubt about Congress's will in this case is strong evidence that the President has failed to make his case for an invasion. He needs to do that to win public support as well as Congressional support. Going to war without such approval leaves a president "on his own"—without a safety net if anything goes wrong.

Independent of the Haiti case, it's time for Congress to fulfill its oft-made—and oft-broken—resolve to rewrite the 1973 War Powers Resolution, which neither Congress nor the President finds workable. It permits a president to put troops in combat for up to 90 days, but then demands their removal if Congress has not approved their dispatch.

In the case of Haiti, President Clinton has sought and obtained the blessing of the United Nations Security Council for an invasion. If he plans to use US troops, however, he needs to secure the authorization of the US Congress. He is rumored to be thinking of mounting an invasion when Congress is in recess later this month, but that would be a mistake. Clinton needs to face, not duck, opponents of his Haiti policy. If he wins a vote in Congress, that might really induce the Haitian military to flee to France.

Mr. DOLE. It says, "Haiti Vote Now," and it points out a number of reasons why I think the President should come to Congress.

Let me just reiterate what my colleague has said.

Mr. President, I am not certain what rationale the administration may have in mind, if in fact there is intervention in Haiti. Certainly, if it is because the people are impoverished or the people are suffering, if that were a rationale that you could use, that might be enough. But that is not. There are not any Americans being threatened. There is no real American interests being threatened. There are a lot of poor people there. They deserve our help. But that is not enough to justify intervention, shedding Haitian blood, and perhaps American blood. And who knows how long the occupation would last thereafter? We all know the last one lasted about 19 years.

So it seems to me that the President of the United States has some obligation to come to Congress and make his case. In my view, if the President can persuade the Congress that he is right, we ought to do what he asked us to do, what he asked the American people to do, or asked the American soldier to do. Then I think his case will be strengthened with the American people.

I recall that after President Bush came to Congress, not one single member of the Democratic leadership, not a single Member in the House or the Senate of the Democratic leadership, supported President Bush's efforts to get Congress to authorize the use of offensive forces in Iraq. But there were 11 Democrats and a number of Republicans, and President Bush rolled the dice and prevailed.

As I recall it—I will go back to check to be certain—but once the Congress put its stamp of approval on what President Bush asked, then support for that operation climbed steadily. I think the same would be true, whether it is Haiti or anywhere else.

I do not see any reason for an intervention in Haiti. Others do. The Presiding Officer feels just as strongly the other way, and maybe for good reason. But I think we all should make the case that the President has an obligation to come to us, to come to Congress, to make his case. First, he has to make it to the American people.

It appears that the only country that is going to help us is now saying we cannot do it because our Congress objects. What about our Congress? If there are going to be American soldiers, why not Argentine soldiers? In our Congress, we reflect the views of the American people. We ought to be prepared to have some role.

So I support the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania because it is much like the Gregg-Dole amendment which was defeated. And I hope that maybe today Senator SPECTER may prevail. But if not, the White House should not misunderstand the vote, or misconstrue the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I thank you. I thank my colleague from Arizona.

Mr. President, on this particular question, I join with the Senator from Arizona and others who are concerned about the possible ramifications of potential action that we would be taking if we were to approve the amendment by our colleague from Pennsylvania.

I understand the intent of his amendment at this particular point. I do not agree, however, with the operative effect of it. I think that this would be a very serious and, indeed, dangerous precedent for the Congress of the United States to engage in.

I happen to be one, with all deference to the Republican leader, who was, at least temporarily, as the occupant of the chair is now, in the leadership 3 years ago, whatever the date was, when we were asked to consider the question of force authorization. I, as the occupant of the chair, supported force authorization with respect to the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq. But in this particular case, I differ with my friend from Arizona with respect to the advisability of some action and certainly with respect to the question of whether or not the President is engaged—I know for a fact that he is engaged and is considering this question very, very seriously.

But putting that aside for a moment, the far more serious question is whether or not we should attempt, given the responsibility under the Constitution to declare war, whether we should attempt to usurp the authority of the President of the United States under section 2, article II, in his role as Commander in Chief.

In this particular case, an attempt to engage in prior restraint would not only send the very difficult and mixed signal that has already been alluded to in some of the debate, it would set a precedent for future U.S. actions that would be, in my judgment, fundamentally wrong. Again, there is a wide difference within this body as to whether or not the President ought to engage in certain actions.

I supported the unanimous consent resolution recently because it was a sense-of-the-Senate resolution regarding whether or not U.N. Security Resolution 940, I think was the number, actually authorized the use of U.S. forces. Clearly on its face, it did not and could not.

This is a different question, however. I think it is very important that our colleagues understand the potential ramifications and the precedents that this would set, and I think as far as I am concerned certainly would be entirely a wrong precedent.

So with all deference to my friend from Pennsylvania, whose expertise in terms of the Constitution of the United States is not questioned or challenged by any Member of this body, and indeed there are very wide differences on this particular point, I nonetheless must respectfully urge my colleagues to vote against the Specter amendment.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

I thank my colleague from Arizona for yielding the time.

Mr. SPECTER. Will the Senator from Virginia yield for a question?

Mr. ROBB. The Senator would be delighted to yield for a question.

Mr. SPECTER. My question to the Senator from Virginia is that the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee stated earlier in response to a question that the Congress has the de jure authority to declare war but the de facto authority to declare war has been overtaken by the President. Would you agree with that?

Mr. ROBB. Let me say, Mr. President, to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I am not as quick to defend constitutional role in war-making as some of my friends. I accept that. I accept the War Powers Resolution. I think it is important, however, to recognize that as Commander in Chief we expect certain responsibility to be vested in the President of the United States. I think that we severely inhibit his or potentially her ability to carry out that function if we engage in additional restraint, and particularly if the attempt is to engage in specific prior restraint with respect to activities that may or may not be undertaken or authorization that may or may not be requested.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my colleague. I take that as a qualified yes.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Let me try to make myself clear on this issue. The question before this body is not whether we think that the President of the United States should invade Haiti. The Senate has spoken very clearly on that issue. In October 1993, on the Defense appropriations bill, there was a vote by the U.S. Senate to express the sense of the Senate. Just a few days ago, a short time ago, there was a 100-to-0 vote which was correctly interpreted as a message to the President that he must come to the Congress before initiating a military action in Haiti. And if there was a simple, again, sense-of-the-Senate resolution here as to whether we should invade Haiti, I do not have any doubt that the vote would be overwhelming in opposition to invasion.

But this is not about whether we should invade Haiti. I believe with every bone in my body that the President should consult with Congress, should come to Congress for authorization, and should receive approval of any military action in Haiti. According to the Washington Post this morning, "September also would have the virtue of coinciding with the end of the upcoming congressional recess, should Clinton be disposed to consult."

I say to my friend from Virginia, if he believes the President is fully engaged, I hope he will ask that "senior administration official," whoever it was, to correct his statement that the President has "not even entered this discussion seriously." Maybe a retraction could be issued by that senior administration official.

Mr. President, is the answer to the problem of a failure of the President to consult with Congress and receive authorization from Congress a prohibition, a prospective proscription of actions on the part of the President? I would say the answer is no. I believe that if any military action is initiated by the President, without congressional approval, it will fail. The Vietnam war, Somalia, and Beirut prove that you have to have support of the American people and the support of the Congress; otherwise, military actions are doomed to failure.

I believe that this President is very smart, and I believe that this President is going to realize that he has to come to the Congress and the American people—not necessarily in that order—if he is going to invade Haiti. For us to say we are so afraid that he will not that we have to prohibit him from becoming militarily involved in Haiti, I believe, creates an enormous constitutional crisis.

I will add one other thing from the Members' perspective on my side of the aisle; that is, I do not expect the other party to control the White House forever. I believe fervently, hopefully, prayerfully, that somebody from my party will be President of the United States. If that happens, I would hate for us to have set a precedence where we are prohibiting the President of the United States from carrying out his responsibilities as Commander in Chief. The fact is that at any time the President of the United States is engaged militarily, the Congress can debate a declaration of war and declare war or not. If the Congress chooses not to exercise their constitutional rights to do that, then that responsibility lies on the Congress, not on the President.

I repeat, Mr. President, I want the President of the United States to come and consult. I want him to get approval and authorization before we engage ourselves militarily in Haiti. I am afraid he may not. But for us to prohibit the President of the United States from taking actions, which I believe are clearly within his constitutional authority, I think is the wrong solution. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator controls 5 minutes 18 seconds.

Mr. MCCAIN. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Thank you very much, Mr. President. I thank my colleague from Arizona.

I suppose I can say "amen" here to what he just said. This is not a debate about whether or not we ought to commit United States Forces to Haiti. That debate, hopefully, will never come and we will not have to engage in that question, and the issue will be resolved without ever getting to that point. But if it does, there will clearly be—if it comes to the Congress—a significant debate and discussion.

Ideally—the Senator from Arizona is absolutely correct—the proper way to proceed is that Presidents come to the Congress and ask for that kind of authority before engaging. As my colleague has pointed out—and I was not here for all of this debate—I count 14 or 15 occasions since 1903 when Presidents of all political persuasions have injected U.S. Forces into hostile environments without prior authority from the Congress. It began in Panama in 1903. Coincidentally, the last one also happens to be Panama. Many would have argued—and I think did—that they wish the President had come to this Congress beforehand.

But the point I think the Senator from Arizona is making, and the one I think we need to emphasize, is that under our Constitution, the Constitution divides war powers, in effect, between Congress and the Executive. That is why we have these debates, because it clearly is the power of the President to be Commander in Chief. It is also very clear that the power to declare war is vested in the Congress. So you have these two branches of Government, separate but equal, that are charged in the same Constitution with responsibilities in the conduct of war. And so we find ourselves in this situation. So I say to my friend from Pennsylvania, while I certainly respect his knowledge and ability and awareness in constitutional areas, I do not think at this juncture you want to be precommitting without the initiation being taken by the Executive.

President Bush, to his credit, came to this institution prior to the conflict in the Persian Gulf. He asked this body, and the other, to express its view on whether or not forces should be committed to hostilities in the Middle East. I point out that—I do not know the exact number; my colleague could probably tell me—there was a significant number of forces we sent over to the Middle East prior to the debate in this body. But President Bush deserves a great deal of credit for what he did then, the least of which was to come here and ask our view.

I generally say that this President should do the same, if he can, if he is confronted with that choice. There may be circumstances, as we have seen in other examples where that will not or cannot be the case. I do not want to tie the hands of a President when he feels as though he should take some action. He can inform and consult with the Congress, but not necessarily be able to come and seek that authority.

So I do not know what the proper motion is here, but whatever it is, I urge that this amendment be defeated. Again, we have had 5 amendments now, as I count them, in the last 2 weeks on Haiti. We have had a pretty good discussion around here about what the circumstances are and, I think, what we all hope happens. I think this is a premature debate. Hopefully, it is a debate that will never have to occur because we will not have to commit those United States Forces to Haiti. I join with my colleague from Arizona and the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee in support of the proposition that this amendment be rejected.

I thank my colleague from Arizona, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania controls 3 minutes 20 seconds; the Senator from Arizona 1 minute 6 seconds.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the key point was made by the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee when he said, in response to my question, that de jure the Congress has the authority to declare war and de facto the President has the power to declare war. I think that is correct.

I think that is the way it has worked out, and it is high time, under circumstances as clear as those present now, that the Congress reassert its de jure and de facto authority to declare war. "De jure" means out of law; "de facto" means out of fact.

The fact is that he who asserts the fact of the matter controls what practically happens, and where you have a situation where the Senate of the United States has said, "Do not invade Haiti," and the House has said, "Do not invade Haiti," and the President says, "I am not mandated to get the authority of the Congress," that is a flat violation of the constitutional requirement that only the Congress has the power to declare war. There may well be a constitutional crisis if the President moves ahead to declare war and make war in violation of the Constitution.

Mr. President, this amendment is carefully crafted to leave the President his authority as Commander in Chief to have temporary deployment of U.S. Forces to protect U.S. citizens or to have the deployment of U.S. forces to protect vital U.S. national security interests where there is not time to come to the Congress. So his power as Commander in Chief is respected and protected.

What this amendment does is seek to reassert the de facto authority of the Congress as the sole authority to declare war.

It is ironic, Mr. President, that we articulate a desire to promote democracy in Haiti while we are ignoring democracy and the United States Constitution at home.

Mr. President, how much time remains?

Mr. SPECTER. I yield the floor.

Who yields time?

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I yield myself the remaining time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute 1 second.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, one of the great embarrassments to me as a Senator is the failure to abide by our own law, which is the War Powers Act.

I urge the participation of Senator SPECTER and others in this body to review this law and revise it in a fashion that we can obey. We should abide by the laws that we pass as we expect the people of the rest of the country to abide the laws we pass.

This amendment is not about whether we should invade Haiti. That issue has been ventilated and will be ventilated again many times on the floor. This amendment is not about whether the President should come to the Congress of the United States and consult and receive prior authorization before he invades Haiti, if he contemplates such action.

This amendment is about the Constitution of the United States and Senator SPECTER's view of it and mine.

I believe that history shows that the President of the United States should be clear to exercise his powers as Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces. I believe the Constitution of the United States does provides him with this authority. For us to prospectively prohibit that action, I think would set a very dangerous precedent for the future.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this amendment is about a de facto amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It was succinctly and accurately expressed by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee that the President takes on the de facto authority to declare war, and if, in the circumstances here where there has been ample time for the President to come to the Congress and he does not, the Congress says, "Do not make war in Haiti," and the President responds, "I am not mandated to come back to the Congress," if we allow that to stand and if we allow the President to assert and usurp the authority to make war, we are having a de facto amendment of the Constitution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

WRONG SIGNAL ON HAITI

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania on Haiti. The adoption of this amendment today would send the wrong message to the military leadership in Haiti. We should not take action today that gives the de facto Haitian Government any sense of security or complacency, and which might impede other diplomatic efforts to ensure their speedy departure.

I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania in that I believe that the President should seek prior congressional approval for any military action in Haiti that does not stem from the urgent need to protect Americans living in Haiti or from some other immediate national security concern. Under the Constitution, the President has the freedom of action to respond to those emergency situations. Military actions to remove the military leadership of Haiti and return the legitimately elected civil authorities are actions for which he should want and should seek the approval and support of the Congress. I believe that the President understands that actions such as are contemplated for Haiti, involving risk for United States military personnel, are actions for which he would want and would seek congressional support and approval. That way, should any eventual military action result in casualties, that burden would not be borne by the President alone.

A prohibition on the use of military force in Haiti except in cases where the President already has the clear constitutional authority to act, is unwise at this time. It gives support for the military leadership in Haiti. The President needs flexibility to exercise his responsibilities as Commander in Chief and he should also have the good judgment to build a solid consensus in Congress and the American public for military action. The President, I believe, has that good judgment and I do not think we should be presuming that he does not. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to table this amendment.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I do not support an invasion of Haiti at this time, but I will oppose the Specter amendment which appears to prohibit it.

As Senator MCCAIN, and others who oppose both an invasion and the amendment have argued, the Specter language would do nothing but undercut the ability of this or any future President to use the threat of force as a negotiating tool.

I want the President to seek congressional authorization prior to any action. I believe that President Bush's decision to seek such an authorization prior to the conflict with Iraq was extremely helpful. If President Clinton believes that an invasion of Haiti is necessary, he should explain that to the Congress and the country. He should explain the need for action and the strategy which will guide that action. While I am not now persuaded that an invasion is the best course to take, I intend to listen carefully to the President's arguments and explanations.

Mr. President, the Specter amendment involves issues of process and politics rather than policy. Defeat of this amendment does not mean that the Congress supports or wants an invasion of Haiti; adoption of this amendment would not prohibit an invasion since it spells out, as does existing law, situations in which the President may act unilaterally.

The Senate has cast a series of votes on Haiti over the past few weeks. My votes on those amendments make it clear that I want the President to consult with the Congress and that I am not persuaded that an invasion is justified or wise at this time. It was unfortunate, in my view, that this amendment was offered as the debate has made clear, Senators do not see this as a debate about policy. It is a debate about process and no one—in Haiti or in America—should read anything more than that into this vote. To interpret this as a vote for or against a given policy in Haiti would be a serious mistake and could lead to serious miscalculations.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today to join Senator MCCAIN in opposing the amendment of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania.

I have consistently voted against legislation, such as the amendment offered by Senator SPECTER, which would prohibit the president from exercising his constitutional authority as Commander in Chief. I last spoke to this issue on June 29, during consideration of a similar amendment offered by Senator GREGG.

I agree with the arguments of Senator MCCAIN that the Constitution grants the President, as Commander in Chief, the authority to deploy U.S. military forces abroad as he deems appropriate. I would hope that Presidents, absent situations where timing is so critical that consultations cannot precede execution of a military operation, would either consult with Congress or seek prior congressional authorization regarding the use of force. But I do not find constitutional authority to require such congressional involvement as a condition precedent.

Having said that, my vote against the specter amendment should not be broadly interpreted as an endorsement of a United States invasion of Haiti, given the facts existing today, August 5, 1994. I have serious misgivings about the policy being pursued by the administration regarding Haiti. I remain firm in my belief that the administration has not made a convincing case to justify the use of United States troops in Haiti.

We are all moved by the tragedies in Haiti—the human rights violations, the thousands of desperate refugees, the military leaders prospering while the poor are suffering. But our compassion alone is not sufficient reason for endangering the lives of the men and women of the U.S. Armed Forces, should they be ordered to invade. Compassion will not offset the injury to other nations in this hemisphere who constantly remind us of Yankee imperialism in years past.

The main question that I believe the administration has failed to answer is—what is the United States national interest in Haiti that would justify the use of United States military power? It appears at this point that there remains disagreement at the highest levels of the administration regarding this question. I refer my colleagues to Senator MCCAIN's floor statement of yesterday addressing the New York Times article of August 4 entitled, "Top U.S. Officials Divided in Debate on Invading Haiti."

During briefings to the Congress, administration officials have said that the United States has an interest in restoring democracy to Haiti. This is not, as some officials claim, a justification for the use of force. While we would like to see democracy restored in Haiti, we should not shed American blood to achieve that goal.

The administration has also stated that we have an interest in stability in the Caribbean. I agree. But I fail to see how the situation in Haiti is contributing to uncontrolled instability in the region. Several months ago, on May 16, the nation which adjoins Haiti, the Dominican Republic, held a Presidential election. The unrest in Haiti—just miles away—did not de-stabilize that free election.

We should not forget the history of United States military involvement in Haiti as we contemplate a possible invasion. The last time the United States intervened in Haiti it restored order, in 1915, we remained for 19 years. History has a way of repeating itself.

Mr. President, it is unfortunately true that the world today is a more dangerous and violent place than it was just 10 years ago. There are currently 64 areas of conflict in the world. The United States cannot be expected to solve all of the problems in the world today. We are not the world's policeman. We must be selective in the use of U.S. military power. Unless vital U.S. national interests are at stake, U.S. troops should not be sent into harm's way. At this point, Haiti does not meet that standard. A U.S. military solution to the problems in that country should be avoided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pursuant to the previous order, the Senator from Arizona is recognized upon the expiration of time.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, on this vote I have a pair with the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS]. Senator JEFFORDS is unavoidably absent. If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea," for the McCain motion to table. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay." And, therefore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MATHEWS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 63, nays 31, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now occurs on the underlying committee amendment on page 25, line 8.

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

So the excepted committee amendment beginning on page 25, line 8, through line 13, was agreed to.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HARKIN. I move to reconsider also the vote on the Specter amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a motion to reconsider the vote to table the Specter amendment. Is there a motion to lay that upon the table?

Mr. SPECTER. So moved.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that pursuant to the previous agreement, the list of excepted amendments be modified to read as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DORGAN). Will the Senator modify his request to delete the committee amendment on page 25, lines 8 through 13?

Mr. HARKIN. That was the one just adopted. I delete the one excepted amendment on page 25, lines 8 through 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, now we are ready to move to an amendment that will be offered by the Senator from Arizona regarding the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. As soon as he is recognized to offer that, then perhaps we can enter into some time agreement on it.

Mr. McCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, before I send an amendment to the desk, I would like to tell the distinguished managers that the Republican leader has asked for 10 minutes to speak on this amendment. So I only need 5 or 10 minutes. I will need a maximum of 20 minutes on this side on the issue. I will be glad to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement for a time limit.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I ask unanimous consent that on the McCain amendment dealing with the Corporation for Public Broadcasting there be 40 minutes equally divided, 20 minutes controlled by the Senator from Arizona, or his designee, and 20 minutes controlled by Senator INOUYE, or his designee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPECTER. I want to be sure, reserving the right to object, that Senator STEVENS has 10 minutes in that time.

Mr. BROWN. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BROWN. Is the distinguished chairman willing to include my Taiwan amendment in that unanimous-consent request? I will be happy to limit that to 10 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. We have not cleared that.

Mr. BROWN. It has not been cleared. I thought it would be appropriate to do it in terms of a time limitation.

Mr. HARKIN. We will seek to get that agreement as soon as we finish the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. I think we will be OK on it.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request propounded by the Senator from Iowa? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arizona.

(Purpose: To increase funding for AIDS programs)

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendment be laid aside and that the committee amendment beginning on page 68, line 18, through page 69, line 5, be the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I send a second-degree amendment to the pending committee amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the committee amendment on page 69, at the end of line 5, insert the following: Provided further, That $37,360,000 shall be transferred to Department of Health and Human Services to be used solely for AIDS research and prevention programs in Fiscal Year 1997."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, this amendment mandates that of the $330 million appropriated in the bill for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, $37,360,000 should be transferred to the Department of Health and Human Services to be used for AIDS research and prevention programs.

The bill before the Senate appropriates $330 million to the CPB for fiscal year 1997. This amendment lowers that amount to $292,640,000000, the amount that was requested by the President and mandates the difference be used for AIDS research.

Mr. President, this is simply a matter of priorities. Each day Americans in every Member's State, in every congressional district will die from AIDS. According to the Centers for Disease Control, as of March 1994, 382,173 Americans were diagnosed as having AIDS and another 1 million were infected with the HIV virus.

Based on current information, those numbers will undoubtedly increase. The facts surrounding this killer are well known, and there is no need to repeat them all. But there exists no cure for AIDS, and we are in desperate need to do all we can to fund AIDS research and prevention programs.

At the same time, we are increasing the funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. The President requested the Corporation for Public Broadcasting be funded at $292 million for 1997. I do not always agree with the President, but when I do—and when I recognize a concerted effort on his part to control spending—then we have an obligation, in my view, to support him.

Mr. President, I repeat, this is an issue of priorities. Do we increase funding for the CPB in excess of the President's request, or do we use the money for AIDS research?

Let me repeat, pediatrics AIDS programs in this bill are funded at a level $1 million less than requested, yet we are funding the Corporation for Public Broadcasting above requested levels.

The supporters of the CPB constantly state how important the CPB is for our Nation's young people. Let me emphasize, this is obviously very important to young people, but those young people have to be alive. The House has realized that we must make priorities, and the House Members and the Labor/HHS Appropriations Subcommittee cut the fiscal year 1995 budget by $20 million. The report that accompanies the House bill states:

> The committee's action to rescind a portion of the advanced appropriation for 1995 is consistent with funding recommendations for many other programs in the bill which are slightly reduced below the 1994 funding level due to the committee's tight budget allocation and the need to shift resources to the President's investment priorities in education, job training, health prevention and biomedical research.

The CPB may have served a need when it was created in 1969. It served many individuals who were not able to receive quality programming and does still in some areas. But times have changed, needs have changed, and our priorities must change with them.

Cable is now available to 97 percent of American homes and 63 percent of all households subscribe to cable television and subscription rates are rising. Additionally, direct broadcast service television, known as DBS, has begun direct satellite-to-home broadcast television. The popularity of that service is expected to skyrocket.

What kind of programming can someone watch on these venues? Stations such as Arts and Entertain, BRAVO, CNN, Nickelodeon, C-SPAN and Discovery—many stations that air programs as good as, if not better, than those which exist on PBS. Yet we continue to raise the spending levels for the CPB.

I am keenly aware that the Senator from Alaska and the Senator from Hawaii will point out the far-reaching areas of their States where cable is not available and public broadcasting is necessary. I would state to my colleagues, first, DBS will soon solve that problem; second, if my amendment is adopted, we in Congress can mandate during consideration of the reauthorization bill, which is currently pending in the Commerce Committee, that CPB use its funding to ensure that rural Alaska and rural Hawaii is not abandoned; and, third, we will still be funding the CPB at substantial levels.

I acknowledge that there is a need for public broadcasting stations to remote sections of our Nation. However, in areas such as metro Washington, DC, where three public broadcasting stations are available over the airwaves, at the very least, continued increases in Federal funding must be called into question.

I repeat, it is a matter of priorities.

Cutting the money from the CPB budget will not cause public broadcasting to cease. Public broadcasting can and will continue to exist, but the fact remains, using this $37 million to fund AIDS research may save lives. It may bring us one day closer to a cure for this deadly disease. And that, Mr. President, I believe is worth a small reduction in the CPB budget.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. INOUYE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise in support of the funding level for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting which is included in this bill, $330 million for fiscal year 1997.

Mr. President, this amount is well below the proposed authorized level of $425 million provided for in S. 2120, the Public Broadcasting Act of 1994.

The funding contained in this appropriations bill would allow public broadcasting stations to simply maintain the present level of high quality programming. I think all of us have seen firsthand how public broadcasting has helped this country. Public broadcasting's effort in education, advanced technology, and program development continues to set the standard for commercial broadcasting.

For example, nationwide, public television is the largest contributor of video and televised instructional material for schools, for colleges, and home viewers in the country. Public TV reaches over 29 million students in nearly 70,000 schools from kindergarten to grade 12. Close to 2 million teachers use public educational services provided by public TV and nearly 2 million adults have earned college credit because of public broadcasting.

Last month, public television launched a new school readiness service designed to help children to start school ready to learn. The ready to learn service is being tested in 11 sites across the country, and this service will offer quality children's programming, community outreach, and increased support services for children.

Yesterday, public broadcasting announced that it will launch another new education initiative called Ready to Earn. This service is designed to enhance career and economic opportunity for millions of Americans. "Going the Distance," the first of the ready to earn programs, will allow students to earn associate of arts degrees in over 60 community colleges in PBS telecourses. The program will enable students who need to work, parents who need to take care of their children, and citizens who do not live near a college campus to earn a college degree.

Many of us do not realize this, but public television provides closed captioning for the hearing impaired, a descriptive video service which has an optional audio narration track for the sight impaired, and Spanish language tracks for Spanish-speaking students.

Public broadcasting also allocates a large percentage of its funds to enhance programming by and for minorities in traditionally unserved areas. And through the Independent Television Service and five minority consortia, public broadcasting has enabled Americans to explore important social issues and experience a wide variety of opinions and ideas.

CPB coordinates statewide planning and conducts research to help public broadcasting systems keep up with the new technologies and fluctuating financial conditions. For instance, many public radio and television stations are exploring new ways to manage the administrative and technical processes to achieve greater efficiency, and I applaud the efforts of these stations to become more efficient and eliminate duplicate program coverage.

When one considers, Mr. President, that public broadcasting receives only $1 a year per person from the Federal Government, one can only conclude that public broadcasting is one of the wisest investments that Congress can make. The Communications Subcommittee of the Commerce Committee is committed to passing reauthorization legislation this year so that we can ensure a healthy public broadcasting system in this country. The subcommittee held a hearing just 2 months ago on legislation to reauthorize the CPB, and I expect the bill to be marked up before the next recess.

The House is also expected to introduce a similar measure and to hold hearings rather soon. And I believe any issues with regard to CPB programs and policies should more properly be considered in the context of an authorization bill.

Finally, Mr. President, I support the funding level contained in this bill and must commend Senator HARKIN and the Appropriations Committee for demonstrating such fiscal responsibility. The funding provided in the appropriations bill is a good investment in our country's future.

Mr. President, it is time once again for Congress to reaffirm its commitment to the public broadcasting system and to provide the financial stability and means needed for CPB to realize its full potential.

How much time do we have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii has 14 minutes and 10 seconds remaining. The Senator from Arizona has 14 minutes and 26 seconds remaining.

Mr. INOUYE. I suggest the absence of a quorum with no time taken off from either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is noted, with no time taken off the time agreement. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. How much time is remaining on both sides, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 14 minutes remaining to the Senator from Iowa and 14 minutes and 26 seconds remaining to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARKIN. Will the Senator from Hawaii yield to me a couple minutes on the subject?

Mr. INOUYE. I would be happy to. I promised 10 minutes to the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. HARKIN. How much time does the Senator from Hawaii have?

Mr. INOUYE. Fourteen minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just under 14 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. I ask the Senator to yield 2 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I urge Senators to vote against the McCain amendment. Few of the programs funded in this bill touch as many lives as public broadcasting does; 90 million people watch public television, more than half of American households in any given week. Many of them are children. For them, public television makes essential learning opportunities available regardless of their parents' education, income, or occupation. It exposes children to information about world politics, economic events, and career opportunities that will affect their lives.

Commercial broadcasting's primary goal is to deliver an audience to advertisers. Public broadcasting's primary goal is to produce quality programs that do not necessarily make money, and this difference makes public broadcasting unique. There is nothing like All Things Considered or Morning Edition anywhere on commercial radio. There is nothing like MacNeil/Lehrer or Sesame Street anywhere on commercial television.

Of the $330 million provided in the Senate bill for CPB, $218 million goes directly to the Nation's 700 radio stations and 350 public television stations in the form of community service grants. Stations use these grants to acquire or produce programming that serves the needs of their local communities. In spite of overall increases in CPB funding, many stations have had their grants cut in real and relative terms. Between 1989 and 1994, at least 15 new public television stations and 90 new public radio stations have become eligible for these grants. Grants to these new stations, although helping the system bring public broadcasting services to areas and audiences not previously served, have offset significantly the growth in Federal support for existing stations. Small rural stations are most reliant on these funds and would be most affected by cuts. For rural audiences, the money we appropriate is vital. Because television stations in rural areas do not have great fundraising capabilities, smaller rural stations will likely be forced to cut service to their communities. Public broadcasting works because it is a partnership between business, Government and the American people. If you weaken one leg, the whole enterprise is affected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has consumed 2 minutes.

Who yields time?

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum without taking time off either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is noted without the time being taken from either side. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I want to use about 2 minutes of my time.

Then I would like to go ahead and move to lay the pending amendment aside so that Senator BROWN, the Senator from Colorado, can pose his amendment. I believe the Senator from Iowa is working on a time certain for this vote and also for the next vote.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, today as we consider the level of funding to be provided for the Corporation of Public Broadcasting, I believe it is important to reflect on the accomplishments and potential for public broadcasting.

During the last 27 years, public broadcasting has enabled Americans to take countless journeys, explore the heavens and Earth, participate in great events and arouse more dreams and address more issues of social importance.

Public broadcasting is no longer just "MacNeil/Lehrer," "All Things Considered," or Big Bird. Today it is public telecommunications encompassing all forms of technology from videodisc to interactive computers and high-definition television to other means of communication that will continue to allow us to dream, take journeys, experience great drama and music, and explore the heavens and beyond.

Today, communications technologies offer exciting opportunities to improve the quality and quantity of educational programming on television and radio. Education is the key to the future of our country. If we fail to provide quality education, we risk not only the minds of our children but also our Nation's place in an increasingly competitive world. But how do we, in times of budget deficits, make the most of our limited resources to ensure that Americans are able to function in the workplace? One way is to empower citizens and communities to work together to find solutions. And in order to do so, it is Congress' role to provide citizens and communities the means to work together.

One of the best means available to Congress to achieve this goal is public telecommunications. CPB is embarking on several new journeys which ensure its place in our changing world. It is exploring new ways to improve school readiness for very young children using the powerful medium of television as a positive influence rather than a harmful one. It is developing community-wide education and information services that will provide local capacity to utilize the national information infrastructure. And it is seeking ways to use its access into every community and every home to address such difficult problems as youth violence.

Preschool children have been exposed since the late 1960s to the early childhood educational values of "Sesame Street" and "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood." Classroom television from kindergarten through high school reaches 29 million students across the country with science, math, and reading instruction. After school, public television programs like "Reading Rainbow", "Where in the World is Carmen SanDiego?", and the upcoming "Magic Schoolbus" series, encourage youngsters to pursue subjects such as reading, geography, and science.

College courses are available through the Annenberg/CPB Project, a 1981 initiative to promote adult education which has been a pioneer in interactive computer systems to improve teaching and learning. Nearly 1.5 million students used the audio and video material in their college classes in 1989. Approximately 150,000 students have completed Project courses for college credit, and an additional 7.5 million general interest viewers tune in to courses every week.

For these reasons, I fully support the Appropriations Committee recommendation to provide $330 million to the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for fiscal year 1997 and I oppose the McCain amendment to cut CPB funds.

Mr. President, I also ask your permission to submit for the record an article from yesterday's Washington Post which describes a new Public Broadcasting Service initiative, "Going the Distance." The program is a cooperative effort with 60 community colleges across the country, including Northern Virginia Community College, that will enable students for the first time to earn degrees entirely through PBS telecourses. I believe this is a sterling example of public TV's commitment to meet the lifelong educational needs of all Americans and to be a significant provider of quality programming for the so-called information superhighway.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

PBS LAUNCHES COUCH COLLEGE—STUDENTS CAN EARN ASSOCIATE DEGREE

(By Ellen Edwards)

Public television has forged a partnership with 60 community colleges around the country that will enable students to earn degrees for the first time entirely through PBS "telecourses."

"It will bind PBS as never before to its original education mission," said PBS President Ervin Duggan. "Educational TV has come a long way since a single camera was trained on Mrs. Gundy holding a pointer at the blackboard.

"In a 500-channel universe we have to have a unique and differentiated mission. This is the first big strategic thing we are doing."

The program, called Going the Distance and scheduled to begin this fall, is to be announced at a news conference today. It will permit students who need to work, who take care of their children at home or who live too far from a campus to earn an associate of arts degree from any of the colleges paired with 20 PBS stations.

In the Washington area, only Maryland Public Television is participating in the program's initial phase, in conjunction with Prince Georges Community College in Largo, Catonsville Community College in Baltimore, Howard Community College in Columbia and Northern Virginia Community College in Annandale.

PBS has offered courses for credit since 1981—with nearly 350,000 enrolled last year—but students have never before been able to earn a degree with only those programs. The program comes under the umbrella of PBS's new "Ready to Earn" initiative, which is a parallel program with the network's elaborate preschool initiative called "Ready to Learn."

Reich said the increasing "structural unemployment" brought about by technology and downsizing is forcing more people to develop new job skills. "Our message loud and clear is that the future requires you to upgrade your skills and get ahead.".

In addition, it is a way for community colleges to increase their own enrollment.

PBS estimates that 90 percent of the students participating in "distance learning" are employed; 68 percent are women; and 70 percent are between the ages of 23 and 49.

Wanda Cromer, 29, is typical. She is married, lives in Prince George's County, works full time as an administrator for a computer company in College Park and is raising two children, ages 4 and 6. She now tapes her telecourses off the Prince George's cable channel, she said, and watches them when she can. She wants to get an associate degree in business management, which she estimates will take her about four years, and then transfer to the University of Maryland to complete requirements for a bachelor's degree. Right now she has had to go to the Prince George's campus to meet course requirements. The new program will give her increased flexibility in where and how she completes the courses.

PBS's Adult Learning Service has been self-supporting, according to Jinny Goldstein, who is in charge of educational project development, and Going the Distance should also pay for itself. PBS receives a $15 fee from the colleges for each student who takes the class as well as a license fee of between $400 and $500 from the college to air each course.

Some of the course materials come from programs that originally aired on PBS, such as "Eyes on the Prize," about the civil rights struggle in America, and "Art of the Western World." Other courses are created by outside educational producers specifically for the program. For the fall, about 60 courses will be offered.

Students must register and pay tuition at a participating community college, and then they receive the video portion of the course in a variety of ways—either through over-the-air broadcasts on the station, on videocassettes or on educational cable channels.

Each participating school sets its own requirements for successful completion of the course.

In each case the effort will be to reach students who could not otherwise attend college and work toward a degree.

"The information highway," said Reich, "is irrelevant if you don't know how to drive on it."

Because of its focus on job training and retraining, Labor Secretary Robert Reich is to join Duggan in announcing the program this morning. "This effort directly affects the work force of the future," Reich said yesterday. "Earnings are directly correlated to knowledge. Those who have some training beyond high school earn about 10 percent more than those with only a high school degree."

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise in support of the funding level for the Corporation For Public Broadcasting [CPB] included in the Labor, HHS and Education Appropriations bill. The Appropriations Committee approved $330 million for the CPB for fiscal year 1997. This amount is well below the proposed authorized level of $425 million provided for in S. 2120, the Public Broadcasting Act of 1994.

The funding contained in this appropriations bill would allow public broadcasting stations to simply maintain the level of high-quality programming they provide today while properly balancing the need of Congress to show fiscal responsibility.

We have all seen first hand how public broadcasting has helped our Nation. Public broadcasting's efforts in education, advanced technology, and program development continue to set the standard for commercial broadcasting. For instance, in the area of education, Public television has shown itself to be one of the most economical and efficient mechanisms for distributing educational information to our homes and schools. Public television stations are providing their local schools and State educational institutions with technical expertise and quality programs to supplement classroom instruction.

Nationwide, public television is the largest contributor of video and televised instructional materials for schools, colleges and home viewers in the country. Public TV reaches over 29 million students in nearly 70,000 schools, grades K through 12. Close to 2 million teachers use public educational services provided by Public TV and nearly 2 million adults have earned college credit because of public broadcasting.

Last month public television launched a new school readiness service designed to help children start school ready to learn. The ready-to-learn service is being tested in 11 sites across the country. The new service will offer quality children's programming, community outreach and increased support services for children, families, and child care providers.

Today, the Public Broadcasting Service announced that it will launch yet another new education initiation called "ready-to-earn." The ready-to-earn service is designed to enhance career and economic opportunities for millions of Americans. "Going the distance," the first of the ready-to-earn programs will allow students to obtain an associates arts degree from over 60 community colleges through PBS telecourses. The program will enable students who need to work, parents who need to take care of their children and citizens who do not live near a college campus to earn a college degree. Mr. President, continued Federal funding will enable public broadcasting to offer more programs like these—programs that will help millions of American citizens.

We should not forget how public broadcasting has helped broaden the reach of television to many of our Nation's citizens. Public television provides closed-captioning for the hearing-impaired, Descriptive Video Services [DVS]—an optional audio narration track for the sight-impaired, and Spanish language tracks for Spanish-speaking citizens. Innovative services like these are important as our society becomes more diverse.

The CPB also allocates a large percentage of its funds to enhance programming by and for minorities and traditionally unserved areas. Through the Independent Television Service [ITVS] and the five minority consortia, public broadcasting has enabled Americans to explore important social issues and experience a wide variety of opinions and ideas.

The CPB coordinates systemwide planning and conducts research to help the Public Broadcasting System keep up with new technologies and fluctuating financial conditions. For instance, many public radio and television stations are exploring new ways to manage their administrative and technical processes to achieve greater efficiencies. Some are discussing ways to consolidate their stations and share resources. I applaud the efforts of these stations to become more efficient and eliminate duplicate program coverage.

When one considers that public broadcasting receives only $1 a year per person from the Federal Government, one can only conclude that public broadcasting is one of the wisest investments that Congress can make.

Mr. President, the Communications Subcommittee of the Commerce Committee is committed to passing reauthorization legislation this year so that we can ensure a healthy public broadcasting system in this country. The subcommittee held a hearing just 2 months ago on legislation to reauthorize the CPB. I expect the bill to be marked up before the next recess. The House is also expected to introduce a similar measure and to hold a hearing relatively soon. I believe any issues with regard to CPB programs and policies should more properly be considered in the context of an authorization bill.

Finally, Mr. President, I support the funding level contained in this appropriations bill and must commend Senator HARKIN and the Appropriations Committee for demonstrating such fiscal responsibility. The funding provided in the appropriations bill is a good investment in our country's future.

It is time once again for Congress to reaffirm its commitment to the Public Broadcasting System and to provide the financial stability and means needed for the CPB to realize its full potential.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I urge the Senate to support the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and the funding levels provided by the committee for its important programs.

The Corporation for Public Broadcasting [CPB] has done an excellent job creating many worthwhile educational programs for young people, and a wide range of documentary and cultural programming for older viewers.

At a time when commercial programming is often saturated with violence, public broadcasting offers a realistic alternative for young viewers and families. Programs such as "Sesame Street" and "Shining Time Station" are widely watched, and they deserve our support.

The Federal investment in public broadcasting is approximately $1 per person. That investment must be matched by $2.50 in non-Federal support. More than twice that amount in matching funds is actually attained each year, demonstrating the enthusiasm and broad support that CPB has earned through its record of quality programming and community outreach.

In Massachusetts, WGBH and WGBY have been extraordinary leaders in their communities. I commend WGBH for its instrumental role in supporting the Ready to Learn Program. School readiness is the first of the Nation's education goals. Ready to Learn is using television and video broadcasting to develop important programming for preschool children to help them enter school ready to learn.

The Ready to Learn activities are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Education, to insure that educational priorities are included in the programming. Public broadcasting has been an early advocate and innovator in this effort, and I am pleased that the Department of Education will be working closely with CPB in this effort to improve readiness skills for the Nation's preschoolers.

Some critics claim that because so many alternatives now exist, public broadcasting is no longer needed. It is true that some cable signals provide similar educational programming. But nationally, only a little over half of all households subscribe to cable. By contrast, public broadcasting is available in any home with a television set, and we ought to take advantage of this access.

No other alternative can match the commitment of public broadcasting to educational, informative, and cultural programming. Our national system of community-based and viewer-supported public broadcasting is an extraordinary achievement.

Support for public broadcasting is good public policy and a sound Federal investment. I urge the Senate not to undermine it.

NATO AIR STRIKES IN BOSNIA

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I have just been informed that NATO airplanes are getting ready to conduct strikes in Bosnia. I have long opposed this action. I am very concerned about the ultimate outcome of the use of air power without a full commitment of the U.S. forces because I do not believe it is a viable military option. I think we may be on the verge of a very dangerous move on the part of the United States of America without the American people being properly consulted as to what we are getting into.

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Iowa, at this time to set aside the pending amendment in order that Senator BROWN may offer his amendment.

Mr. HARKIN. I have no objection. I hope we can get a time agreement.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remaining time. The Republican leader said he wanted to speak. He is unable to. I understand from the Senator from Hawaii that the same is true in his case.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I agree to the unanimous-consent request that we set the pending amendment aside; that we recognize the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN] for his Taiwan amendment, and that the Senator from Colorado have 10 minutes; then at the end of his 10 minutes, we will return to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair inquires of the Senator from Iowa, is it his intention that his request be that the pending amendment and the underlying amendment be set aside?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes, exactly, that both be set aside.

Mr. McCAIN. Reserving the right to object, is it also the view of the Senator from Iowa that we have both votes, on both the Brown and the McCain amendments, at approximately 1:15?

Mr. HARKIN. I am hopeful that we can do that. That will have to be checked further. I hope we just go ahead and go to the Brown amendment. Let us take that up. We will try to get this time worked out.

Mr. McCAIN. I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment to the committee amendment on behalf of myself, Senators SIMON, MURKOWSKI, and LIEBERMAN.

AMENDMENT NO. 2462 TO THE EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 51

(Purpose: To ensure that the President of the Republic of China on Taiwan can enter the United States on certain occasions)

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN], for himself, Mr. SIMON, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Mr. LIEBERMAN, proposes an amendment numbered 2462.

"SEC. . VISAS FOR OFFICIALS OF TAIWAN.

Section 4(b)(6) of the Taiwan Relations Act (22 U.S.C. 3302(b)(6) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(A)" immediately after "(6)"; and

"(B) Whenever the president of Taiwan or any other high-level official of Taiwan shall apply to visit the United States for the purposes of discussions with United States federal or state government officials concerning:

(i) Trade or business with Taiwan that will reduce the U.S.-Taiwan trade deficit;

(ii) Prevention of nuclear proliferation;

(iii) Threats to the national security of the United States;

(iv) The protection of the global environment;

(v) The protection of endangered species; or

(vi) Regional humanitarian disasters.

The official shall be admitted to the United States, unless the official is otherwise excludable under the immigration laws of the United States.".

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I asked that the amendment be read in full to the body because it is very brief and to the point. The point is simply this:

This country has had a policy of excluding or denying visas to officials from Taiwan to visit this country. Members may have varied and differing feelings on that subject. I, for my own part, believe it is a great mistake to refuse to talk with our friends in Taiwan, or to refuse to permit them to visit.

The purpose of this amendment is self-evident. It pinpoints some specific instances in which the Congress can go on record as favoring visits by Taiwanese officials.

Back on May 4, the President of Taiwan stopped overnight in Hawaii. He was on his way to Costa Rica. He had asked for an opportunity to spend the night in Hawaii during his trip. This democratically elected leader of a foreign country, who is our fifth largest trading partner, who has stood side-by-side with us in conflicts around the world, was denied even the opportunity to stay overnight in Hawaii. It is almost unbelievable. Taiwan is a country that wants to be our friend—one of our bigger trading partners—and this administration will not even permit the democratically elected leader of Taiwan to stay overnight. The administration's unbelievable treatment of our distinguished Taiwanese guest prompted this amendment.

It is in this Nation's interest to at least allow contacts with Taiwanese officials on specific matters. What is included in this amendment are matters that I suspect no Member of this body will find objectionable. It requires that in discussions with regard to United States-Taiwan trade matters, and the trade deficit, we will permit them to talk with us. It also requires that for discussions of efforts to prevent nuclear proliferation, Taiwanese officials should be admitted; for threats to the national security of the United States, Taiwanese officials should be admitted; for discussions involving protection of the global environment; protection of endangered species; and regional humanitarian disasters—for discussions in these narrow, specific areas, the Taiwanese leadership will be admitted. All of these are areas I believe every Member of this body feels are appropriate and necessary, and it would be unreasonable to exclude Taiwanese officials from the United States to discuss these matters.

I am going to ask for a recorded vote on this amendment, because it is important that we go on record to let the Nation and the world know that we believe this kind of discussion and debate is important and helpful.

Mr. President, it is incredible at a time when we are facing potential problems—conflicts around the world—that we would be unwilling to even allow officials of the Taiwanese Government, who are our friends, major trading partners, who believe in democracy, who have stood side-by-side with us in a variety of conflicts, that we would prohibit them from even visiting this country. Thus, Mr. President, this amendment is offered. It is one I think would be helpful to set forth the opinions and the views of the American people. I hope it will result in a change in our policy toward Taiwan.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this time to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Senator PAUL SIMON to his colleagues on this subject, dated May 5, and also a letter from the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and six of its members regarding this subject, as well.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, May 5, 1994.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Yesterday, the United States slighted President Li of Taiwan when he was in our country. The Taiwan government had asked for an overnight stop for President Li in Honolulu, en route from Taiwan to Costa Rica. The ambassador of the People's Republic made a strong protest; the administration considered not allowing any stop at all; the compromise was a 90-minute refueling stop.

President Li was not allowed to disembark in Honolulu. No ranking official of our government was on hand to welcome the freely-elected leader of a friendly and prosperous democracy which has, in contrast to the People's Republic, an exemplary human rights record. Yesterday I expressed my dismay to Secretary Christopher in the attached letter.

Increased focus this spring, both here and in the administration, on China's deplorable human rights record and the President's upcoming determination on its MFN status should not mean U.S. neglect of its important relationship with Taiwan (the Republic of China). That view was widely shared when we adopted Section 508 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, signed by the President on April 30, expressing the sense of the Congress that:

"in addition to Cabinet-level visits, the President should take steps to show clear United States support for Taiwan. . ."

Since last year, the administration has held off completing a review of U.S. policy toward Taiwan. It has sought to delay Senate hearings on policy toward Taiwan. Now, we are given to understand that the policy review will be completed after the President's decision on China's MFN status is announced.

Before June 3, I will seek passage of my Taiwan resolution, S. Res. 148, which encourages full participation by representatives of Taiwan in the U.N. as well as Cabinet-level exchanges between the U.S. and Taiwan. S. Res. 148, which is attached, now has 22 cosponsors.

I hope you will consider joining us in supporting S. Res. 148.

PAUL SIMON,
U.S. Senator.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, July 25, 1994.

Hon. RONALD V. DELLUMS,
Chairman, House Armed Services Committee, Washington, DC.
Hon. FLOYD SPENCE,
Ranking Member, House Armed Services Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN DELLUMS AND MR. SPENCE: In May, the United States turned down a request by President Lee of Taiwan to overnight in Hawaii en route to Costa Rica. Instead, we only permitted him to land for 90 minutes to refuel.

Taiwan is the United States' fifth largest trading partner, one of our closest allies in the Pacific and a functioning democracy. In our view, the Administration's policy of refusing entry to Taiwan's president does not make sense.

Consequently, during consideration of the Defense Authorization Bill for FY1995, the Senate included a provision to ensure that the President of Taiwan and other high-level Taiwanese will be admitted to the United States for discussions of matters directly related to U.S. interests, including:

(a) Trade or business with Taiwan that will reduce the U.S.-Taiwan trade deficit;

(b) Prevention of nuclear proliferation;

(c) Threats to the national security of the United States;

(d) The protection of the global environment;

(e) The protection of endangered species; or

(f) Regional humanitarian disasters.

We strongly urge you to include the Brown-Simon amendment concerning "Visas for Officials of Taiwan" in the final version of the conference report.

Sincerely,
CLAIBORNE PELL,
CHARLES S. ROBB,
PAUL SIMON,
JESSE HELMS,
FRANK MURKOWSKI,
HANK BROWN,
U.S. Senators.

VISAS FOR HIGH-LEVEL TAIWANESE OFFICIALS

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my good friend from Colorado, Senator BROWN, in offering this amendment to ensure that high-level officials from the Taiwanese Government will be issued visas to visit the United States to discuss issues of mutual interest to our two governments.

I find it shocking that this amendment is even necessary. The Taiwan Relations Act was passed "to promote the foreign policy of the United States by authorizing the continuation of commercial, cultural, and other relations between the people of the United States and the people on Taiwan," 22 U.S.C. 3301. This policy has been impeded because of the U.S. Government's restrictive policies on high-level visits.

I remind my colleagues that Taiwan is the world's 13th largest trading partner and the United States 5th largest trading partner. With $16.2 billion in United States exports to Taiwan in 1993, it was the United States' second largest export market in the Asia-Pacific region, after Japan. It holds the world's largest foreign reserves. Taiwan is friendly, democratic, stable and prosperous. Its human rights record has steadily improved.

And how do we treat this democratic country that plays such an important part in our economic and security interests in East Asia? I believe we wrongly treat them like an international pariah. In May of this year, I was embarrassed to learn that the Department of State refused the request of the Honorable Lee Teng-hui, the freely elected leader of the democratic Republic of China on Taiwan, to overnight in Hawaii en route to Costa Rica. I believe this decision was extremely ill-advised. Similar snubs have met other high-ranking Taiwanese officials. For instance, Taiwanese officials are forced to meet with U.S. Government officials in hotels, rather than Government buildings, even though they are discussing issues that are of mutual interest to the people of both countries.

The U.S. Government has the opportunity to make long overdue changes to its policy. For well over a year, the United States Government has been engaged in an interagency review of its policy toward Taiwan. President Clinton could take important steps to show clear United States support for Taiwan as part of this policy review. He could begin by welcoming President Lee Teng-hui on U.S. soil for a visit. There is ample precedent for such a visit by the leader of a country with which we don't maintain formal diplomatic ties. Senator BROWN and I also would like the State Department to allow President Lee to visit our home States of Alaska and Colorado as part of our efforts to expand and strengthen ties between the people of the United States and the people of Taiwan.

President Clinton could also incorporate high-level exchanges into its new policy. I encourage President Clinton to send one of his Cabinet officers to Taiwan this fall. Fifty three of my colleagues joined me in letter to the President inviting him to do just that. Such visits will promote American interests in Taiwan and ensure the continued success of American business projects.

Even small, but symbolic changes, such as allowing the Coordination Council on North American Affairs to change its name to the Taipei Representative Office will show that the United States is prepared to treat the people of Taiwan with the respect they deserve.

Mr. President, I know my colleagues have supported many amendments over the past year that have had the intent of sending a signal both to the United States Government and to the people of Taiwan that the United States Senate supports positive changes in United States policy toward Taiwan. I am confident that this amendment will be added to that list. I hope the administration is listening.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that beginning at 1:15, the vote on or in relation to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], commence; that upon the disposition of that vote, without any intervening business, the Senate proceed to the vote on or in relation to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators, there will be two back-to-back votes beginning at 1:15 then.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Chair advises the Senator from Iowa that he controls 9 minutes. The Senator from Colorado controls 5½ minutes.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LEAHY. Had a time specific been set for the vote on this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont should be advised there are two votes that will occur starting at 1:15. On the Brown amendment, as the Chair indicated, there are 8½ minutes remaining for the Senator from Iowa, and 5 minutes remaining for the Senator from Colorado.

The Chair will further advise that on the McCain amendment, each side has approximately 12 minutes remaining.

The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, pursuant to prior agreement, I am pleased to yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the President and I thank the Senator from Hawaii.

AMENDMENT NO. 2461

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President. I am opposed to this amendment which attacks the forward funding concept that was developed in the Public Broadcasting Financing Act of 1975.

I worked on that measure, as did our former colleague, Senator Barry Goldwater.

The purpose of forward funding is to help public broadcasting raise non-Federal funds. Each year, Congress directs public broadcasting to raise $2.50 in non-Federal support for every Federal dollar received. In recent years, CPB has attracted more than $6 in matching funds for every Federal dollar invested.

Thus, public broadcasting is more than doubling its statutory match, making it one of the most successful public-private partnerships in the Federal budget.

Forward funding was also developed to protect public broadcasting from politically motivated interference in its programming.

I know public broadcasting is not perfect. Many of my constituents have complained about programs they felt were biased against reasonable development in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge—I shared their concerns. Many, including me, felt a recent Frontline piece of the 1872 mining law was biased against miners.

But we should not destroy the system to address an issue. Senator INOYUE and I are members of the authorizing committee, as is the Senator from Arizona—that is the appropriate forum for complaints about objectivity or balance.

I for one am not going to set myself up as the censor of public broadcasting. The law establishing CPB calls for balance in programming. I frankly believe CPB should go farther to achieve that goal and I stand ready to work with public broadcasting toward that end.

Congress has mandated that public broadcasting expand its signal to reach rural and underserved areas. By 1997 we will have more stations on-line to achieve that goal. A return to 1995 levels will produce an across-the-board reduction in funding. That 5-percent cut does not account for inflation.

Mr. President, the small rural radio stations of my State cannot afford such a cut. Some of them have already reduced services because of tough economic times in many rural areas of Alaska.

In Alaska, we have what are called sole service stations. Stations in Galena, Unalaska, Chevak, St. Paul, Sand Point, Ft. Yukon, Unalakleet, and Talkeetna all provide the only local broadcast service. In most instances they are the only daily news service. Public broadcasting is the only source of news and official information in these communities.

Unlike large urban stations, where CPB is a small part of the overall economic picture, some of the sole service stations I am talking about, whether on St. Paul Island or Zuni, New Mexico, depend on CPB grants for up to 50 percent of their total support.

In the spring of 1991, when the Kuskokwim River overflowed its banks and threatened the lives of many people in the western interior of Alaska, it was KSKO public radio in McGrath that literally came to the rescue.

Over KSKO, State officials told residents which local roads were safe to travel and when emergency supplies would be available.

KSKO became the 911 service for that portion of my State. I urge the Senate not to cut funds to that life-line; a cut in those funds will threaten public safety in large portions of Alaska.

Again, not too long ago, several subsistence walrus hunters from the Arctic community of Gambell were lost in a violent storm in the Bering Sea. Alaska's Governor was conducting his monthly call-in program on the public radio network when the Gambell mayor called-in to alert the Governor to the situation of the walrus hunters. Within minutes, the Governor dispatched the National Guard to that area and those hunters were saved.

People do not understand the relationship between public broadcasting and public service in an area such as ours, one-fifth of the United States in areas where there is no other means of communication other than public broadcasting.

Public broadcasting in Alaska also helps preserve a way of life. In Bethel, AK, through KYUK the only television station, newsbreaks are provided in their Yupik Eskimo language. To do this the station maintains two news staff—one English-speaking, one Yupik-speaking. That costs money.

The effect of the proposed CPB reduction would be the almost certain loss of Native language news broadcasts in Bethel and elsewhere, in places where bilingual programs are absolutely necessary. Those cuts cannot be sustained.

The unintended consequences of cutting CPB further will reduce services to rural Americans who are already underserved and some that are unserved that the increased financing would provide. These people are already denied full access to news and information. The only solution is that that CBP provides to these underserved and unserved areas.

So I oppose the McCain amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LEAHY. I ask if the Senator from Iowa will yield me time.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, again, what is the time situation so I can know what to yield to the Senator?

Mr. HARKIN. On behalf of the Senator from Hawaii, I yield 7 minutes of that time to the Senator from Vermont. How much time is left on the Brown amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has 8 minutes remaining on the Brown amendment.

Mr. HARKIN. I yield 5 of those 8 minutes at the beginning also to the Senator from Vermont, to give the Senator from Vermont at least 12 minutes. If he needs more, I will yield more.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my remarks appear at a different place in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LANDMINES

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, 2 years ago when the U.S. Senate passed the moratorium on exports of antipersonnel landmines, many people were skeptical. They said we were naive to think that other landmine exporting nations would follow our lead. In fact, over and over again, the naysayers would mention Italy. They mentioned Italy because Italy produces and exports more landmines than practically anybody else. They said the Italians would simply take over the markets for landmines that the American companies lost.

I heard the same thing when I introduced legislation last month to impose a 1-year moratorium on the production of antipersonnel mines. Some in the Pentagon called it unilateral disarmament, as if somehow antipersonnel landmines is the key to American military superiority. Others said that Italy and other countries would simply expand their production.

Often around here, the pessimists win out. But interestingly enough, that has not happened with landmines. Time and again in the past 2 years, the naysayers have been proven wrong. Our export moratorium was like a shot heard around the world. What started as nothing more than a whisper, suddenly became a deafening cry for global action to ban landmines altogether. A lot of countries took heart in what the U.S. Senate did.

Since the United States stopped exporting antipersonnel landmines, at least eight countries have adopted their own moratoria. Six other countries have not enacted formal moratoria, but in practice they have done it because they have stopped issuing export licenses. A number of other countries are expected to soon. It is one of those instances where what we did on the floor of this body actually counted worldwide.

And for the naysayers who kept pointing to Italy, I want them to know what is happening there today.

Italian Senator Caro Ronchi introduced a resolution in the Upper House to ban landmines. It is cosponsored by almost half of that body. Parliamentarian Emma Bonino sponsored identical legislation in the Lower House. And the Italian Minister of Defense announced that he supports a moratorium on both exports and production of antipersonnel landmines.

I think of the times when Tim Rieser, from my office, would talk with people not only in this country but in other parts of the world and felt like a voice in the wilderness. Now Tim gets calls and faxes from around the world from people who want to join with him. And I would note, Mr. President, my personal congratulations to Mr. Rieser for what he has done tirelessly.

In the debate on Mr. Ronchi's resolution earlier this week, the Italian Government pledged to observe a moratorium on the exports of antipersonnel landmines. It further pledged to end production of antipersonnel mines which pose grave dangers to civilians and to work collectively with other countries to support landmine clearing efforts.

I mention this because I want to commend both these legislators for their initiative, and the Italian Defense Minister for his support for this effort.

According to my information, Italy produces over 30 varieties of antipersonnel landmines. Fiat, the automobile manufacturer, is Italy's largest producer of mines. One of its deadlier models is the Valmara 69. If you trip it, it leaps up and then explodes at waist height, spewing shrapnel over a 60-foot kill zone. It can pulverize a child, and blind or blow the arms or legs off of anyone standing within 300 feet.

Thousands of Italian mines were discovered in Iraqi arsenals after the gulf war. Now we know these mines were used against the Kurds in northern Iraq.

Mr. President, we can talk in the abstract. This is what actually happened. This is a photograph of a Kurdish child in northern Iraq who lost a leg from a mine. Look at the face of this child. Can anybody think of this child as an enemy? Can you imagine the tragedy he feels?

Look at the face of his father. You can see the despair and grief he feels for his own child. It is obscene, what is happening. These mines have become a terrorist weapon against civilian populations all over the world.

Mr. President, if Italy lives up to its pledge, it deserves the strong support of the United States. It reflects the views of over half the Senate, Democrats and Republicans, liberals and conservatives, who are original cosponsors of my legislation for a 1-year moratorium on the production of antipersonnel landmines.

Mr. President, in March and May of this year, government experts met in Geneva to begin to prepare for a U.N. conference on landmines next September. The third experts meeting will take place next week. It is absolutely essential that the August meeting achieve significant progress.

How much is achieved in Geneva will depend completely on whether the participants, including the United States and our allies, want this to be an exercise in posturing or one that produces real results.

In 1981, the United States was one of over 50 countries that signed the Conventional Weapons Convention, including the landmine protocol. There was great fanfare and congratulations, and during the next decade somewhere between 50 and 100 million landmines were strewn around the world.

Vast areas of land in dozens of countries became virtual death traps for the people who live there. Landmines became the weapon of choice in the Third World, from Cambodia to Bosnia, and it is civilians who have suffered the most. Well over 100,000, and probably more than 200,000 people have been killed and maimed. Another 1,200 casualties are added each month.

So much for rhetoric. So much for an agreement that was so riddled with loopholes and exceptions that it was worth little more than the paper it was written on. I have to wonder if the diplomats who signed that flawed agreement ever really believed it could accomplish its lofty goals.

Today, 13 years since the landmine protocol was signed, we have the opportunity to show that we have learned something from all the misery that has been caused by landmines since then.

Several countries including the United States, France, and Germany have proposed modifications to the protocol. In France and Germany today, innocent people are still being blown up by mines left from World War II. These proposals contain some good ideas, but none goes nearly far enough. Even if every recommendation was adopted it would fall far short of what is needed to stop this senseless slaughter.

I am pleased that the United States is pushing hard for the extension of the protocol to internal, as well as international conflicts. The vast majority of mine casualties are a result of civil wars.

But far more must be achieved, and frankly I am very concerned that we may see something of a repeat of what happened in 1981. I am afraid that we may see an elaborate and wholly unenforceable control regime that permits the industrialized countries to continue to produce, use, and export to each other their high technology mines, but which does not stand a glimmer of a chance of changing the behavior of the Third World countries where the problem is most severe. That would be a traffic failure of governments to address an urgent humanitarian crisis that afflicts over 60 countries.

I will have a number of recommendations for our negotiators during the coming months. I will also be urging other governments, both those who produce landmines and those whose citizens have experienced the horrors mines cause, to support these recommendations.

Mr. President, we have all watched in horror as hundreds of thousands of innocent people were killed and mutilated in Rwanda. I cannot imagine there is a Member of the Senate who has not been sickened by the news accounts of children, thousands of children, mutilated or hacked to death by people wielding machetes in Rwanda. Our skin crawls at the idea. We are repulsed, as civilized people.

But, Mr. President, that is happening year-round to thousands of children, not being mutilated and killed by machetes, but mutilated and killed by landmines. Some of those mines have been there for years, placed by governments no longer in power or by combatants who are no longer even remembered, but they have left this deadly legacy; and sometimes it has been combatants who placed the landmines there before these children were even born.

And now those children see a metal object that might even resemble a toy, and they go eagerly to pick it up. And it is the last thing they will ever see, because even if they live, they have probably lost their eyes and half their face.

Mr. President, so many people stood by for months during the genocide in Rwanda. We do not have to do that with landmines. We can stop the landmine scourge if we challenge other countries and give support to those who share our goals.

As part of that effort, 3 weeks ago, U.S. Army personnel went to Cambodia to train Cambodian troops to clear some of the 5 to 10 million landmines strewn there. This mission is a result of funding approved by the Congress last year to support humanitarian mine clearing overseas. Additional funds are going to be in the 1995 Defense appropriations bill, as well as funds for research and development of new technology for detecting and destroying mines. It is not too late. There are 100 million unexploded landmines strewn around the world.

Mr. President, one of the things I look forward to when we are not in session is to be back at my home in Vermont, to walk around the fields and woods on my tree farm there. It is one of the prettiest places I know. I have been walking those same trails and fields as I did when I was a child. I do it with a sense of safety and security and peace.

As many as 100 million landmines are in countries where you cannot walk in the fields or the woods, or let your cattle graze, or your children play, or reap your crops, because you know you may die from it by stepping on a mine.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the transcript of a television film on landmines, produced by the Center for Defense Information, entitled "Killing Fields: The Deadly Legacy of Landmines," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Center for Defense Information]

KILLING FIELDS: THE DEADLY LEGACY OF LANDMINES

Steve Goose: The human costs of landmines are appalling. The Red Cross estimates that probably some 15,000 people a year are either killed or injured by landmines around the world. That means that while your viewers are watching this program, probably one or two people are going to be killed or maimed by landmines.

Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT): Time after time, when I've talked with landmine victims in Africa, in Central America, in every part of the world where I've talked to them, and I've said, "What side were you on in the conflict?" Time and time again, they say, "I'm just trying to raise food for my family. I didn't have a side."

Narrator: They are known as "hidden killers" and "weapons of mass destruction in slow motion." They have killed or maimed more people than have been killed by nuclear, biological and chemical weapons combined. They have been called the perfect soldier, never sleeping and never missing. Unlike other weapons, many of them are designed to maim, but not kill. They are landmines.

["America's Defense Monitor" program introduction.]

Admiral Eugene Carroll, Jr. (USN, Ret.): One-hundred and thirty years ago, General Sherman said that "war is hell." Today, in some respects, war is even worse. For example, there are modern weapons which go on wrecking havoc, destroying lives, maiming innocent children, killing farmers in their fields long after the battles are over. This program will show you graphic evidence of this in images which are grim and disturbing, but you will see firsthand evidence of the deadly legacy of landmines.

Kenneth Rutherford: About ten minutes into our excursion, the Land Rover filled up with dust and lurched forward. I looked at my Somali colleague. His face was covered with dust, and then down to my legs. My right foot was gone. At first, I wondered if the bone that I saw was mine or Duali, my IRC colleague. It was mine.

Several times I tried to put my right foot back on. It was hanging by stretched skin towards my knee. I would attempt to do a partial sit-up so I could reach up and touch my foot, and the foot kept on falling off.

Narrator: The International Committee of the Red Cross says landmines kill or injure more than 1200 people per month world-wide, most of them unarmed civilians.

General Patrick Blagden: Every 15 minutes of the daylight hours of every day, of every week, of every month, of every year, I hit my desk and I say, "That's another one gone."

Jody Williams: A report by the US State Department released last year estimates 100 million uncleared landmines in the world today.

Narrator: Jody Williams is coordinator of the Landmines Campaign of the Vietnam Veterans of America Foundation, which is part of an international effort to ban the production, stockpiling, sale and use of landmines.

Ms. Williams: There are also estimated to be an additional 100 million in stockpiles around the world.

Narrator: Many landmines are designed specifically to main rather than kill, in order to make the victims an ongoing burden.

Mr. Goose: Landmine injuries are particularly gruesome.

Narrator: Steve Goose is the Washington Director of the Human Rights Watch Arms Project, which co-authored the authoritative report, Landmines: A Deadly Legacy.

Mr. Goose: Doctors who have to deal with these things in the field say that they are amongst the worst things to try and treat. The blast blows up bits of shoe, and plastic, and metal tear up into a leg. Almost always it results in either traumatic amputation by the mine itself or by surgical amputation later.

General Blagden: Many people won't even make it out of the minefield; they'll die in agony where they are. Over half will be women and children. And those that survive will be physically, mentally, socially, and economically crippled for life.

Narrator: The loss of a limb is just the beginning of a landmine victim's problems. A victim will typically have to undergo as many as six to eight operations. He or she might have to have a prosthesis fitted and then learn to walk again.

Prosthetic techniques struggle to keep up with the gruesome effects of landmine technology and the cost of rehabilitation is hundreds the times the cost of the mine itself.

Ms. Williams: Think of a national territory with 10 million landmines in it. What does that mean to returning refugee populations when they come back into areas where they used to live which are now mined? How do they know where to resettle? Where do they plant their crops? Where do they graze their animals? Where do they build their huts? It obviously has to have a long term impact on the rebuilding of a society in a post-conflict setting.

Mr. Goose: There are more than 60 countries that have reported landmine incidents. There are probably about two dozen countries that have very serious landmine problems, where it's affecting the way that the country can operate.

Narrator: The State Department estimates there are more than 10 million landmines in Afghanistan, nine million in Angola, three million in Iraqi Kurdistan, and two million each in Somalia, Mozambique and the former Yugoslavia, to name just a few countries.

Ms. Williams: The only parts of the world today that are not infested with landmines are North America, Antarctica, New Zealand and Austrialia. Practically every other region of the world has a serious landmine problem. It has to be addressed.

Narrator: Cambodia has four to seven million mines on its territory. Most were laid between 1979 and 1991. According to the Pentagon, 600,000 US-produced antipersonnel mines were shipped to Cambodia between 1971 and 1975.

Landmine explosions since then have resulted in more than 30,000 amputees. Between 300 to 700 Cambodians still lose limbs each month. It is thought that for every mine victim who makes it to a hospital, another dies in the field. The Cambodian conflict may be the first war in history in which mines claimed more victims, both combatant and civilian, than any other weapon.

Since the end of the Gulf War, landmines laid by Iraq have killed more than 1700 Kuwaiti civilians. Eighty-three mine cleaners have died while clearing the Kuwaiti desert of mines.

Mr. Goose: There are certainly still plenty of landmines out there from World War II. Some people would say that there are explosive devices that work like landmines that are still left from World War I. But there are still people who are being injured from landmines in Libya, and Poland, and France every year from World War II vintage mines.

Narrator: The tragic cost in life and limb is matched by the cost of defusing the danger. The UN estimates that the average cost for removing a landmine can range up to $1000. The average yearly per capita income in Cambodia is about $280. To completely demine Cambodia would require every one of Cambodia's 10 million people devoting every single penny earned to demining for the next three-and-a-half years. While this is clearly impossible, it highlights the fact that landmines cripple economic development long after the fighting stops.

The huge number of mines scattered around the world is testimony to the wide variety of producers and exporters. The Arms Project has identified more than 340 types of antipersonnel mines alone.

Mr. Goose: We've identified at least 56 nations that have produced landmines. Some of those have stopped producing now; maybe about a half-a-dozen or so have stopped producing. There are probably other nations that we've not yet identified that do make landmines. About 36 countries are exporters or have been exporters.

Narrator: In recent years, China, Italy and the former Soviet Union have been the world's biggest exporters of landmines.

It is estimated that five to ten million landmines are produced annually. It is difficult to track where a landmine is manufactured. Some are the product of multiple manufacturers, often in different countries. And the most destructive, such as the US Claymore mine, are regularly copied and produced by other nations.

Senator Leahy: A landmine can be very inexpensive or very sophisticated.

Narrator: Senator Patrick Leahy is the senior senator from Vermont and the originator, along with Representative Lane Evans of Illinois in the House, of a landmine moratorium, banning the export of US anti-personnel landmines. Originally enacted in 1992, the moratorium was recently extended for another three years.

Senator Leahy: Whether inexpensive or sophisticated, they can tear your limbs off or kill you. Even the simplest ones can maim a person for life. And I'm talking about landmines that only cost three or four dollars to make and to deploy.

Col. Richard Johnson (USA, Ret.): I am convinced though that a ban on anti-personnel mines is not a way to solve the problem.

Col. Johnson: If manufactured anti-personnel mines are banned, an insurgent who wants to still do that same job will find the assets to manufacture his own. He'll either do it from dud-fired ordinance or make his own. It's not that hard to do.

Narrator: Many other countries, however, now support Senator Leahy's view. Since the United States decided to stop exporting landmines in 1992, others have done the same.

Senator Leahy: The Netherlands banned it. France, Greece, South Africa. Cambodia said that they—announced that they will not use them. Others are going to follow suit.

Narrator: Landmine opponents point to the weapon's inability to discriminate between combatants and civilians.

Ms. Williams: What makes the landmine different from the rifle, for example, is the soldier. The soldier can point the rifle, he shoots the rifle; when the battle's over, he takes it home. That is not the case with the landmine. He puts it in the ground, he walks away; the landmine is there, it remains there for literally decades.

Col. Johnson: First of all, I don't think mines are indiscriminate if used responsibly and controlled responsibly.

Senator Leahy: Time and time again, I asked them of the two sides, or three sides that might have been fighting in your country, who put the landmine there that tore off your leg, or killed your children, or killed your spouse. And time and time again, the answer's the same: "I don't know. All I know is my life has changed forever as a result of it."

Mr. Goose: We believe that landmines have been used indiscriminately by most people who have, in fact, deployed landmines over the course of the past several decades. But we further believe that landmines are inherently indiscriminate because of their time-delay function. And we think that because of that, they should already be considered as illegal and inhumane weapons of war under customary international humanitarian law.

Col. Burrus Carnahan (USAF, Ret.): The same criticism can be made of virtually any weapon. Any weapon can be used in an indiscriminate manner.

Narrator: Burrus Carnahan is a retired Air Force lieutenant colonel. He was a United States delegate to an international working group which drafted a Landmine Protocol to regulate their use. The protocol prohibits direct use of mines against civilians. It also calls for recording and publishing minefield locations.

Col. Carnahan: Certainly the protocol on landmines that was drafted in '79 and '80 has not been as successful as we had hoped.

Narrator: Unfortunately, the United States is in the embarrassing position of having signed, but not yet ratified the 1980 UN Convention and accompanying protocols. To this day, both languish in "ratification limbo."

Another problem with the protocol is that it did not really take into account the changes in the way landmines are being used.

Col. Johnson: You can use mines to interdict or interrupt his resupply forces coming forward. But essentially what you're trying to do with mines is at a minimum expense to yourself, in terms of commitment of people—what can be referred to as "economy of force." You're trying to mould the battlefield, shape the terrain, make the enemy do something you want him to do, so you can fight on your terms at least cost to yourself.

Ms. Williams: When one thinks of landmines, one generally has heroic visions of World War II. When I talk to people today about landmines, that is what they think of. They think of barrier defense. They think of huge fields of antitank mines blocking the invasion forces of the evil enemy, correct? Unfortunately, since World War II, mines have not been used that way.

Mr. Goose: What we have seen increasingly over the past several decades is that landmines have changed from being primarily a defensive, limited theater weapon to a weapon that is used offensively in a strategic sense, where it's used to create refugee flows, or to empty vast stretches of territory, or to deny a population its food supply. These offensive uses that are directed primarily against civilians are, of course, outlawed under the laws of war.

Narrator: Landmine technology has also been changing. Landmines have come a long way from the relatively large plate-shaped devices that were buried by hand. Today, many mines are so-called plastic mines, making detection extraordinarily difficult.

Col. Carnahan: The minimum metal content mines are—I think most experts recognize now, are going to create even more humanitarian problems. These mines have such a small metal content that it is very, very difficult to detect them with any type of mine-clearing—mine-detecting technology.

Narrator: Mines are also becoming increasingly difficult to disarm.

Ms. Williams: They have now been fitted with anti-handling devices, which are little micro chips, and they can detect even a five degree tilt in the mine. And if you tilt it that much, it'll blow up in your face.

Narrator: Even more deadly is the way in which massive numbers of landmines can be delivered in extremely short periods of time.

Ms. Williams: You have airborne systems that can scatter thousands of mines within a minute. There's an Italian system that can scatter upwards to 2000 mines in a minute. How can you possibly map where those mines have gone, so that in the post-conflict situation, you can go and find those mines and remove them, so the civilian population can go back and use the soil.

Mr. Goose: You can't accurately mark and record a scatterable minefield. You may have some general notion of the perimeters of the minefield, but there's no way you can accurately indicate where mines are or even really what the borders of the minefield are.

Narrator: Some, however, think technology is the solution rather than the problem. In their view, smart mines are better than no mines.

Col. Johnson: The scatterable mines used by the United States I think can best be categorized as a responsible use of explosive ordinance. They are all—the ones produced today are all electronic refused. They all have a reserve cell or a battery inside them which is activated when the mine is dispensed. The mine has a time set to self-destroy or self-destruct anywhere from four hours to 15 days after the mine has been employed. If during that time, the power in the reserve cell reaches a lower limit, the mine will also self-destruct.

Narrator: There is, however, disagreement about the reliability of such mines. But even with the very low failure rate, humanitarian issues arise.

Senator Leahy: Let's say those were the only ones, and let's say they work perfectly, or as perfectly as most such things would work, and so you scatter 2000 of them and 90 percent work. Do you want to take a chance where those other 200 are that didn't work? Because they're going to kill you, or they're going to tear your legs off, or your arms off, or blind you.

Narrator: The advances in mine-making technology have far outstripped those of mine clearance. Contrary to the systems used by the military to clear a path through a minefield, the ability to disarm all the mines in a field is distinctly low-tech.

Ms. Williams: I spent several weeks in Cambodia in November with the demining teams of CMAC, Cambodian Mine Action Center. They're literally on their hands and knees with something that looks like a large, fat knitting needle, a prod, and they literally prod the ground centimeter by centimeter.

Now can you imagine—Even take a state the size of Massachusetts, which is relatively small. Can you imagine having to start at one end of Massachusetts and prodding the ground of Massachusetts centimeter by centimeter to find 10 million landmines? Figure it out. How long's it going to take?

Multiply that by Cambodia, Afghanistan, Yugoslavia, Mozambique, Somalia, Rwanda, Angola, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Peru, Colombia. You don't have to be a rocket scientist to figure out it's going to take a long time to clean up the mess.

Narrator: Because of the horrific consequences of a mistake, if deminers are not absolutely sure that an area is completely clear, they must treat it as a live area and demine it again. The United Nations standard for successful mine clearance is 99.9 percent.

Jody Williams believes that part of the problem is that military forces do not take the long term view.

Ms. Williams: When they talk about the landmine, they talk about it only in the context of the engagement, of the battle. They do not feel any responsibility toward cleanup after the battle. They think they have the right to go in and do whatever is necessary to get the job done, and then walk away and leave it for the civilians to deal with.

Narrator: But landmines are not just a problem for civilians.

Senator Leahy: More and more, I've talked with those who've been in combat who tell me they wish there were no such things. General Gray, the former commandant of the US Marine Corps, a combat veteran, said he's seen more Americans killed by American landmines than the American landmines being used to destroy any enemy.

Narrator: The UN estimates that 105 million mines, or more, may be deployed in 62 nations. That's one mine in the ground for every 50 people on earth. Disarming them all would cost from $200 to $300 billion.

In some respects, the position of those supporting the use of landmines is analogous to the position of the National Rifle Association on guns. In other words, mines don't kill people, people kill people.

Col. Carahan: If landmines are used responsibly, if they are laid on an area of land that is itself a military objective, if there are military forces around that know where those mines are and can warn civilians away, if the location of that minefield is marked so that they can be cleared later after the conflict is over, then I don't think the use of landmines violates any existing rule of war.

Narrator: While even those who support banning landmines acknowledge they have a military benefit, they question the long term cost.

Mr. Goose: You have to balance off the military utility versus the humanitarian disaster that landmines are causing around the world. And it's our strong belief that, in fact, the humanitarian and economic and social consequences of the use of landmines far outweigh the military utility.

The only way to really come to grips with the landmines disaster on a global scale is to have a comprehensive ban: No production, no possession, no stockpiling, no use and no transfer.

Narrator: Following his call to ban mine exports, Senator Leahy recently announced a new piece of legislation calling for a one-year moratorium on the procurement and production of anti-personnel landmines by the United States. The legislation also urges the president to encourage other major producers of anti-personnel landmines to adopt similar moratoriums.

The landmine issue raises a compelling question: Should short term considerations of military expedience override long term humanitarian and economic costs?

One thing is certain: As long as landmines are seen as an acceptable weapon of war, the world will continue to pay the consequences—an arm, a leg, and a life at a time.

Red Cross Worker: These improvised buggies and trolleys the children behind me have are made out of mines, parts of a VS–2.2 Italian mine. We have also the integral parts of the V–69. The mines are collected from the minefield by the children. Are then taken apart, having done the dangerous bit retrieving the mines from the minefield. They're then dismantled and used as components for the go-carts or buggies.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of whatever time I have to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields back 30 seconds to the Sentor from Iowa.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, before my friend from Vermont leaves the floor, I would like to extend my appreciation for his statement and his advocacy to bring to the attention of the world, and the United States, the problem of landmines. Senators SIMON, FEINGOLD, and I were in Angola this past few months. It is a beautiful country, one of the most potentially viable countries in Africa, with 10 million people—20 million landmines.

We went to a prosthetic center and saw men, women, and children with their legs blown off. They have trouble farming anymore in Angola because of the landmines. And who gets hurt the most trying to farm in Angola? Women and children. The men are out in the civil war.

So I join with my colleague. I join in spirit in the statement he gave today and extend my appreciation for the great work done on this issue.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield one moment, I thank the Senator from Nevada. I should note for the RECORD the Senator from Nevada and the manager of the bill, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] have been original cosponsors of our attempts to ban these landmines. They have both been in the forefront of that. I thank them very much.

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all time remaining on the Brown amendment and on the McCain amendment be yielded back, at which time then the Senator from Nevada be recognized on his own time to speak until the time for the vote set at 1:15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection. It is so ordered.

Mr. REID addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair now recognizes the Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID].

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if I could ask through the Chair to my friend from Iowa, would it be possible to extend the vote for 5 minutes? The reason for that is I have two amendments I have on the list, proposed list. I think we can get rid of both of those with that extra 5 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the vote on the McCain amendment previously scheduled for 1:15 now occur at 1:20; the remainder of the unanimous-consent request remain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, a few months ago in my office here in Washington I met with a young girl by the name of Hydeia. She is a beautiful, bright-eyed young girl, 6 years old. During the course of the time I met with her she sat next to me and she read to me and she recited some of the poems that she had written. She also sang a song for me that she had written for me and my staff. It was very touching, this nice little girl singing and reciting poetry to me.

But it was very sad because her poetry was based around her life experiences, and all of her life experiences centered around the disease that she had. She was HIV infected. Her songs and poetry spoke of the fear and discrimination that this little girl felt and experienced with AIDS, as well as her triumph over this fatal disease to this point in her life.

Hydeia was in Washington to give a speech to a local high school. She was talking to the high school about the problem of AIDS. This young girl spoke for over 30 minutes to these high school students about HIV and AIDS. When she spoke, a physician was sitting behind her on the stage and remarked in admiration he had never seen someone speak so intelligently and thoroughly about the subject of AIDS, and remember, Mr. President, we are talking about a 6-year-old girl.

I bring to the attention of the Senate my friend Hydeia because this young Nevada resident, like many people across the country who suffer from AIDS—it is people like her who have caused me to focus my attention in our investment as a Federal Government in providing treatment and intervention services to our States and communities impacted by AIDS.

You see the people who suffer from AIDS are married women, they are single women, they are children of all ages, they are married men, they are single men, they are heterosexual, they are homosexual, and drug abusers. But they are all human beings with a story to tell.

These people who suffer from AIDS have husbands and wives and mothers and fathers and sisters and brothers and children.

Mr. REID. What I have found is a very serious situation regarding AIDS funding. The State of Nevada has consistently ranked among the top 10 States in the country for AIDS incidence per 100,000 people and leads rural States in HIV morbidity.

The Presiding Officer—until just a second ago—was from a very rural State. And on public radio this week they had a series on AIDS in rural America.

You see most people contract AIDS in urban centers, but many times they go home after they have contracted the disease. But the statistics all originate in the cities. So if someone gets AIDS in a city, that is where they are always counted as being, even though they may be out in rural America where they need help.

So, rural AIDS incidence, even though it may not appear as high as in urban America—and it is not—it still is something that needs our attention. My State, even though we lead, we are in the top 10 States in the country for incidence per 100,000 people and we lead rural States in HIV morbidity, yet we receive little Federal funding. The city of Las Vegas does not qualify for title I funding under the Ryan White Care Act as it is currently written and has obtained no funds under title III(b), even though it ranks fifth in Public Health Region No. 9 for AIDS incidence.

Unfortunately, title I and other Federal programs look at absolute numbers of AIDS cases rather than incidence per 100,000 people. Although Las Vegas is not as populous as other regions, it is the fastest growing city in the Nation and the burden AIDS places on the health care system is greater than that of Phoenix, the whole of Riverside-San Bernadino, or Orange County in its entirety. Yet, these communities received Federal support under Ryan White and Las Vegas does not.

Clearly the formula as it is currently written is not fair, it is not equitable. States receiving both title I and title II funds receive almost $4,000 per AIDS case, while States like Nevada receive only title II funds and receive only about $1,100 per case.

Although the State of Nevada ranks in the top 10 it receives less money in the CARE Act than States with a lower incidence of AIDS. Nevada is not the only state affected by the current formula. In fact, there are 33 States which do not receive funding under title I. This is not fair.

The CARE Act is not the only program, however, that distributes AIDS funding unfairly. It was recently brought to my attention that Nevada was receiving significantly fewer Federal dollars from programs administered by the Centers For Disease Control than States with lesser rates of AIDS incidence. As these charts clearly indicate, despite the impact of AIDS in the State of Nevada it is receiving less money from CDC than States with fewer cases of AIDS.

Let us look, for example, at this chart. We have here the cumulative cases, and it is very, very high in Nevada. It is higher than any other case incidence, but look at the funding per case. Nevada, you can hardly see it on the chart. Nevada's is about a third of what Rhode Island gets. Look at Alaska per AIDS case, it almost goes out of the chart. And on through the rest of the States. It simply is not fair and that can be shown graphically.

The chart I just showed, 20 States with an incidence rate lower than Nevada received more prevention dollars. There are 12 States with lower incidence, lower total cumulative cases, and fewer 1993 cases than Nevada. All 12 of these States received larger 1994 prevention awards. These larger awards are very hard to understand. In fact I defy anyone to give any logic to why that is.

With this next chart it is easy to see. I will take just a few States. Let us take New Mexico as an example. It is almost the same size as Nevada, a little bit smaller. Incidence, 18.2; cumulative cases, a total of 862; but look at the funding they receive compared to Nevada. They receive twice as much money and have less than half the cases. Alaska—we have 46.5 incidence rate; Alaska has 11.7. They have a total of only 200 cases, yet they receive almost a third more money than the State of Nevada.

New Hampshire, a State smaller than the State of Nevada, has an incidence rate of 11; ours is 46½. Yet they have 420 total cases and receive more money than the State of Nevada, even though we have almost 1,800 cases. It simply is not fair.

Although the agency is working with the State of Nevada in an attempt to rectify this situation, I think it is important that I display in the RECORD what the AIDS impact is having on the State of Nevada and other States.

My constituents are seeing their tax dollars going to other States to provide AIDS care and not to their own community. Because of this situation, Mr. President, they are essentially double taxed since the county must pick up the tab for providing needed HIV and AIDS care, which inequitable Federal funding formulas have put out of reach.

I urge the Department of Health and Human Services and the Members of this body to begin to pay careful attention to how we have been distributing funds to address the significant impact AIDS is having on our communities. AIDS is a tragic disease and we should not be shortchanging AIDS patients in one State as opposed to another. There should be equitable distribution of moneys.

All Americans suffering from AIDS deserve receiving equitable access to medical care—sometimes Medicare—and intervention services and should not be faced with the possibility of not receiving care just because they happen to live in one of the States that is being funded unfairly.

I was prepared at this time to offer an amendment to rectify this inequity and provide more Federal money to the Ryan White Care Act. I have chosen not to do that because, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, and as a member of the Labor-HHS Subcommittee in particular, I understand the difficult job laid before Chairman HARKIN and Ranking Member SPECTER. I do not want to disrupt the delicate balance they have achieved in this legislation.

I will, however, signal the warning that I will revisit this issue. I am drafting legislation to correct the inequity in the current title I formula. I look forward to working with my colleagues in passing this legislation, or in working with the formulas, with the agencies, with the subcommittees, with the committees during the reauthorization of the Ryan White Act to make funding allocations to the State and our Nation's communities more equitable.

We cannot allow this funding disparity to continue, and I will work aggressively for equitable and significant change.

I have an obligation to Hydeia, this beautiful little girl who recited poetry and sang to me in my office.

ILLEGAL IMMIGRATION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, on another issue, as some of the Members will recognize, on the bills that have been coming through here, I have been concerned about the impact of people who are not lawfully within the country. I have offered amendments which have been accepted by the Senate on three separate occasions.

Mr. President, I am not going to offer an amendment to this bill. Instead, I rise to commend the managers of this bill for their inclusion of a provision that will help ensure that Government authorities do more. I am satisfied that the committee has done everything within its power to ensure that the funds and benefits provided do not go to those who are not lawfully within this country.

I believe that we ought to be doing more in terms of verification of lawful immigration status. As I indicated, I have offered amendments to other appropriations bills that would do just that. By imposing a fair, tough burden on those who distribute the benefits and assistance, we will provide better integrity to the system by protecting against misappropriation of funds.

We are beginning to do more in this area, and, in so doing, we are rewarding those who play by the rules and punishing those who do not play by the rules. I believe that one of the reasons we have a continuing problem with illegal immigration is because we have an entitlement system that offers incentives to enter the country unlawfully. Whether it is undermanned border security or lax enforcement of laws prohibiting the distribution of funds to illegal immigrants, there just seems to be too many incentives.

There are some incredibly generous programs provided in this bill, programs that will improve and benefit the lives of many. I support our Nation's social programs because I believe that Government can play an important role in improving the lives of Americans. However, if we want to continue those programs, we have to ensure that those who are the legitimate intended beneficiaries receive what they are entitled to. Without greater verification, we will not achieve this. Indeed, without greater verification, we will continue to provide incentives to come to this country unlawfully. Ultimately, that may jeopardize the continued existence of these programs and this, I think, would be tragic.

So, Mr. President, I will continue to review legislation with an eye toward ensuring that more is done to verify the lawful immigration status of those who apply for benefits and assistance. I think this is only common sense, and I believe that those who elected us expect nothing less. This is a difficult and complicated issue, but we all must be willing to do more if we are going to resolve it in a fair and equitable manner.

I say to the managers of this bill, I appreciate the work they have done in this regard. This is an area in which we have to be very careful, because we are dealing with women who are pregnant, children who need all the support and maintenance they can get—and I have no desire to punish children. Many of the programs within this bill deal with the infirm and children generally.

I also say to the managers of this bill, in relation to the AIDS situation which I pointed out, I hope it is not going to be necessary next year that we have to offer an amendment, either at the subcommittee or committee level or certainly on the floor. I hope that the issue relating to fair funding for people who suffer from the AIDS virus can be resolved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand there is a vote at 11:20?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOLE. I request 2 minutes.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have been the target of a lot of attacks from the White House lately, but here is an issue on which President Clinton and I agree. We both support providing a responsible level of funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

When candidate Clinton was asked in a C-SPAN interview if the American taxpayer should spend more money on public television, his answer was, "Oh I support public television. I do not know that we have to spend more money on it now, we have a pretty vital network of public television." Consistent with that view, President Clinton asked the Corporation for Public Broadcasting to tighten its belt a bit by requesting a funding level of $292.6 million for fiscal year 1997.

We talk a lot about deficit reduction in the Senate, and here is an opportunity to back up a modest reduction proposed by the President.

Nevertheless, the Senate Appropriations Committee has given public broadcasting a hefty $18 million raise over the fiscal year 1996 level, and a $37.3 million increase over the level requested by President Clinton. At the same time, the Senate committee has underfunded the President's investments in programs such as job training, Head Start, Education Goals 2000, and the list goes on.

No doubt about it, scarce Federal dollars are hard to come by. A recent study by the 20th Century Fund found that of every dollar spent on public broadcasting, 75 cents goes to overhead. This has been my complaint over the past several years—75 cents for every dollar goes for overhead.

Public broadcasting is a complex institution, and while there is new leadership at CPB, at the public broadcasting system and at national public radio, there are a lot of issues that need to be examined, especially as we approach the next reauthorization for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. These issues include the considerable duplication of services, objectivity and balance requirements, the distribution of production dollars, and the merchandise licensing fees some public broadcasting figures rake in while performing on taxpayer-subsidized airwaves. I look forward to hearing more about CPB's efforts to address these concerns.

Make no mistake about it, I support public broadcasting, and I have been a longtime supporter of local stations. I wish that the amendment can be configured differently so we do not cut back on local stations. I understand that could not be done. We want to fight to bring a fair share of available Federal dollars to public stations, of course, in my State and every other State in the country.

We have a dynamic system of public broadcasting in this country, and there are many quality programs on its airwaves. But, we also have a responsibility to the American taxpayer. While so many worthwhile Government initiatives face the budget axe, does public broadcasting deserve a big raise? The President does not think so. The Senate should agree with him.

VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 2461

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1:20 having arrived, the question occurs on agreeing to amendment No. 2461, offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. McCAIN], to the committee amendment on page 68, line 18 of the bill.

The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

So the amendment (No. 2462) was agreed to.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 51, LINE 16

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

If not, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask that the other excepted committee amendments remain excepted, except for the excepted committee amendment on page 68, line 18, through page 69, line 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. Do I understand, Mr. President, that the amendment on page 68, line 18, through page 69, line 5, has been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HARKIN. And the excepted amendment on page 51, line 16, through page 52, line 17, has also been agreed to, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. That amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, basically, we are at a point here where I know of no other amendments that are to be offered. We are waiting here for amendments. I hope, if any Senators have any amendments to the bill, that they will come over so that Senators can get out of here at a reasonable hour.

We have no other amendments pending right now. We are open for business. Otherwise, we are just going to be here later this afternoon, probably with some procedural votes. So I hope we can get some amendments out here.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, if I may be so bold as to suggest to the leadership, if this matter can be set aside temporarily, the Defense Subcommittee would like to at least lay down our bill, and you can resume whenever you want to.

Mr. HARKIN. If I might respond to the Senator, I would like to consult with the leader in that regard. But I hope that we would at least see some finite end to this bill before we do that. Perhaps we could discuss that.

Mr. INOUYE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. I understand. I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for the amendment I am sending to the desk to be keyed to page 78, line 24.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2463 TO EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT BEGINNING ON PAGE 78, LINES 16 THROUGH 23

(Purpose: To protect the Nation's blood supply)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] proposes an amendment numbered 2463.

SEC. . PROTECTION AGAINST THE HUMAN IMMUNODEFICIENCY VIRUS.

Chapter 51 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1118. Protection against the Human Immunodeficiency Virus

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Whoever, after testing positive for the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) and receiving actual notice of that fact, knowingly donates or sells, or knowingly attempts to donate or sell, blood, semen, tissues, organs, or other bodily fluids, except as determined necessary for medical research, shall be fined or imprisoned in accordance with subsection (c).

"(b) TRANSMISSION NOT REQUIRED.—Transmission of the Human Immunodeficiency Virus does not have to occur for a person to be convicted of a violation of this section.

"(c) PENALTY.—Any person convicted of violating the provisions of subsection (a) shall be subject to a fine of not less than $10,000 nor more than $20,000 and imprisoned for not less than 1 year nor more than 10 years, or both.".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, let me pose a question that is far more than just an idle thought. Should anybody who is HIV positive and who knows it, be able to escape criminal prosecution if he or she donates their tainted blood, tissue, or other bodily fluids? It does not matter whether that blood is actually used or not. The issue is, should someone who knows that he or she is HIV positive and he or she donates blood or body tissue, be able to escape prosecution?

I hope and believe the Senate is going to say, overwhelmingly: No, sir. They should not be in a position to escape prosecution.

Today, 12 States have enacted laws holding such individuals criminally responsible. And with this amendment, the American people will see how many Senators and which Senators are willing to do, on a Federal level, what a dozen States have already done.

Specifically, this amendment will make it a felony for any individual, knowing that he or she is HIV positive, to donate blood or semen or tissues or organs or other bodily fluids, and anybody violating this provision will be subject to a fine of up to $20,000 or imprisonment for up to 10 years, or both.

I believe this amendment is just plain common sense. The 12 States that already have similar statutes are as follows: California, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Ohio, South Carolina, and Virginia.

I am not going to take up the Senate's time with a lengthy discussion of this amendment. I think, as the lawyers say, it is res ipsa loquitur: The thing speaks for itself. But I doubt that any Senator can express the need for this amendment as eloquently as a fine citizen of North Carolina, Mr. Burt Brummet, who lives in Pinehurst. Mr. Brummet, with whom I talked at length one evening, is responsible for my offering this amendment.

Let me tell you about Mr. Brummet. Let me tell you why I want to title this amendment, "The Brummet Blood Supply Protection Act of 1994."

Mr. Brummet contracted the AIDS virus from a blood transfusion he received in 1991 during surgery to replace a heart valve. And that sort of hit home with me because I had a heart valve replaced a year later. I suspect Mr. Brummet's story will hit close to home with a lot of Senators, either Senators who had similar surgery or had surgery in their families.

I do know this, that millions of Americans who have received tainted blood transfusions, or have run the risk of it, will understand the need for this amendment.

But back to Mr. Brummet. He is a fine gentleman. He is retired there from another State. I forget where he moved from, but Pinehurst is a retirement community and the fine folks there are gentle and decent, and most of them are getting up in years, like the Senator from North Carolina.

Anyway, Mr. Brummet contacted me in December—December 6, I think the date was. He talked to me on the telephone about a letter he had sent me explaining exactly what happened to him. He said:

> Dear Senator HELMS, approximately 3 years ago during heart surgery I was transfused HIV infected blood at the Moore Regional Hospital, in Pinehurst, NC.

That is Moore County Regional Hospital. Continuing in his letter, he said:

> As is frequently the case, the hospital and the doctors have kept this a secret, even though we have urged them to go public with this information.
>
> For many reasons, I am convinced that there is much bad blood in the Red Cross blood bank system. The American public is not aware of this danger, and most doctors seem hesitant to discuss this prior to surgery.

He continues:

> Because I believe there are measures that can be taken to improve the availability of clean blood, I feel it is my Christian duty to do what I can to prevent this from happening to others * * *
> In May, 1991, I entered Moore Regional Hospital, Pinehurst, N.C., for heart surgery. The details of this are not important to the message I wish to convey other than to say that the aortic heart valve was replaced. The surgery appeared to be successful and the recovery was slow but perhaps normal for this type of surgery.
>
> Slightly more than one year after this surgery, our family doctor, Dr. Donald Wallace, called us to say that the American Red Cross had advised the hospital that I had been transfused with HIV infected blood.

The letter continues:

> Because my wife, Ellen, had been exposed by me during that past year, it was his opinion [meaning Dr. Wallace] that we should both be tested for the AIDs virus. Our blood tests showed that I was positive and Ellen was negative. We were advised by our doctor that we should keep this a secret from our friends and the community.
>
> After digesting this tragic news for a couple weeks, we decided it was our Christian duty to go public with this in the hope that we might be able to do something to prevent this from happening to someone else.
>
> Although we have gone public with my HIV condition for several months, the doctors and the hospital personnel continue to keep this a big secret event to the point of denial, still claiming that the blood is safe.
>
> The American Red Cross obviously wants this to remain a secret because the blood bank business is the most profitable enterprise they have had for a long time. The hospital and the doctors want it to remain a secret for fear it might affect the availability of blood.
>
> In my opinion, there is only one reason that so little is being done to assure that clean blood is available for transfusion. Only a relatively few people are infected as I have been. Our country's actions respond to public opinion. Not enough people are in my group to bring sufficient pressure to initiate action.
>
> As I'm sure you understand, when a person is infected by whatever means, promiscuous sex, homosexual activities, dirty needles, etc., there is a period of a few months, or in some cases years, before sufficient anti-bodies are generated to result in a positive test for the virus. As a result, there is a period * * * during which an infected donor can infect others even though that person tests negative for the virus. Understanding this fact, it is obvious that there is blood in the blood blanks that will infect persons having transfusions. The American Red Cross has admitted that is what happened to me.

Mr. Brummet continues:

> How many people are infected by AIDs virus from blood transfusions is unknown. I'm excluding the hemophiliacs. The American Red Cross says the number is very small. In fact they have gone so far as to say publicly that no one has been infected by transfusion from their blood bank in recent years.
>
> Others have said that as many as one thousand people are infected each year by transfusion from infected blood. From the studies I have done, the number may be greater than one thousand, because there are many people infected who are not yet aware of it, and many cases are never reported. The effect is not obvious for some time. With the number of infected people being suppressed by doctors and by the blood banks, it is impossible to get an accurate reading on this * * *

And then he concludes:

> This whole subject is generally swept under the rug and the majority go along with very little concern about the hazards of blood transfusions. I wish to do something about this and I believe you will help me. In some manner I wish to be a spokesman for the people infected by the AIDs virus because of transfused blood, if that is what it takes * * * Very truly yours, Bert Brummet.

The point, Mr. President, is this, and this is perfectly obvious: Mr. Brummet is a citizen who did nothing wrong. He did nothing to cause the HIV infection in his body. Just the same, he believes, and I think justifiably, that his life is now ruined because some irresponsible individual donated AIDS-tainted blood. I admire him for his efforts to ensure that others are not also unsuspectingly infected.

Of course, I do not suggest, nor imply, that the pending amendment will stop all donations of AIDS-tainted blood and tissue. Of course, this amendment can do no such thing, but it is a step in the right direction.

As I have stated, there are 12 States which already have taken the step of making it a crime to knowingly donate AIDS-tainted blood or tissue. Moreover, 27 States have made it a crime for someone to intentionally transmit HIV to another individual. I listed the 27 States earlier:

Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, and Washington.

Despite these commendable efforts by States to protect their citizens from those who intentionally transmit the AIDS virus, their ability to do so is limited inasmuch as donated blood travels in interstate commerce. The only way to protect innocent transfusion recipients in these—and other States—is by enacting a Federal statute applicable to every individual who knowingly donates AIDS-tainted blood in this country no matter where he or she donates blood.

The States need a Federal statute to support their efforts. Donated blood travels in interstate commerce. Tainted blood donated in New York City, as matters now stand, can easily find its way transfused into a patient in North Carolina. If carjacking is a Federal crime, and Congress has voted to make it so, Congress should do the same for those irresponsible, mean-spirited people who knowingly donate infected blood or other bodily fluids.

Mr. President, I reiterate that the proposal contained in this amendment is merely a good step in the right direction. It will not entirely eliminate the donation of AIDS-tainted blood. But if this amendment prevents even one innocent American from living through the kind of torment which has been imposed on Mr. Brummet and his family, then Congress will have taken a giant step in the right direction—certainly for those who otherwise will run the risk of having AIDS-tainted blood pumped into their veins.

So the amendment (No. 2463) was agreed to.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SPECTER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM addressed the Chair.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, last night, Dee Dee Myers at the White House challenged the Republican leader and me to show the administration where the 17 taxes were in the Mitchell health care plan. So I immediately went home and got a copy of the plan that was available. What I wanted to do, very briefly, is to show the administration, in yet another gesture of bipartisanship, where these 17 taxes are. And what I have here, now, is the bill in the form it was available last night. So what I am going to do is to go through this very thick bill and give the people at the White House a way to find these 17 taxes.

The bill that was available for me to use in response to the White House had unnumbered pages. Normally, that means that you have thrown something together real quickly, or maybe you are trying to hide something, or maybe numbers do not go that high; I will let people judge what the case may be. But here is a simple way, I think, of finding the 17 taxes.

First of all you need to get a scale like this one. So you get the scale and you put the bill on the scale like this, and you will find that the bill weighs almost exactly 14 pounds.

To find the taxes, what you do is you take off the first 11.1 pounds. After you take off the first 11.1 pounds, if your scales are right, you should be on subtitle (a), entitled "financial provisions." The next 2.9 pounds of the bill contains 16 of the taxes. Then to find the 17th tax—I have tried to find a simple way to do that—put the entire bill back on the scale. Next, take off 2.1 pounds from the top, and that gets you to a section that is titled "distribution," which is where you will find the 17th tax.

I do not have the time now, and I do not want to disrupt debate on the pending bill to go through all of the taxes. But let me just go through three taxes, I submit, that nobody understands.

The first tax is a 1.75 percent tax that every American will pay on their health insurance premiums. The second tax is a 25-percent tax that you will pay on your health insurance premiums if your premiums go up by more than 2 percent above the general rate of inflation in a year.

So imagine this: You get your bill for your insurance next year, and your premiums have gone up by more than 2 percent above inflation, as premiums did for 75 percent of Americans who had health insurance last year. You are already unhappy because your premiums went up by more than 2 percent above the general price index. And so the Government sends a bill saying that because your insurance premiums went up, you now have to pay a 25-percent tax on the increase.

Finally, there is a provision in this bill that says that at an effective date in the future, if you have insurance that costs more than the Clinton administration says that insurance ought to cost—for their so-called standard benefit package—then you are going to be taxed on the amount of those insurance premiums above the amount that the President claims you should be paying. And you are going to be taxed at your effective tax rate.

My point in all this is twofold. No. 1, if you have a good scale like this one, you can take the bill that was available yesterday at the time the White House asked Senator DOLE and me to find the 17 taxes, and if you remember these prescriptions—with the bill on the scale, take off the first 11.1 pounds to find 16 of the 17 taxes; put the entire bill back together on the scale, take off 2.1 pounds, and you find the 17th tax. It is interesting—and I will conclude on this point—that there are three pounds of taxes in the Mitchell bill. There are 0.2 pounds of insurance reform and portability and permanence reform, and there are 10.8 pounds dead weight Government.

I submit that if we took out the 3 pounds of taxes, took out the 10.8 pounds of dead weight Government, that would leave us 0.2 pounds where we are reforming insurance, making it portable and permanent, and making it easier to get and keep. We could then supplement that with about one-third of a pound to reform medical liability. Then, we could sit down and see what we could do to help people get health insurance, and we could adopt a good bill.

I yield the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wonder if the Senator will permit me to borrow his scale?

Mr. GRAMM. I will.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, would the majority leader like the bill as well?

Mr. MITCHELL. No thanks.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator for permitting me to borrow his scale. I now place it on my desk. I ask everyone to look at it. And there is the Republican bill.

Mr. GRAMM. That is not true.

Mr. COATS. That is not true.

Mr. MITCHELL. Of course, it registers zero on the weight scale because there is no bill. It registers zero in its provisions because there are no provisions.

I introduced a bill 1 day after I announced that I had one. Our Republican colleagues announced in June that they had a bill, and we still have not seen it.

I do not think anyone here should be surprised about that, but I say to my colleagues, and I invite any of my colleagues who wish to come over during this day while we are in session to inspect the Republican bill. You have to look hard. Perhaps from this angle you might see something. No. Not from here either.

It is the stealth bill. We spent a lot of money developing a stealth aircraft that no one could see, no one could feel, no one could weigh, no one could track on radar. I think our Republican colleagues have finally succeeded in getting it done. No one can see this bill. It has no weight. It cannot be observed. It cannot even be tracked on radar.

I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, early this morning I asked, on the Senate floor, if it would be possible for the Senate to engage in this serious debate in a serious manner. The Senator from Texas yesterday used the word "Gestapo" to refer to my bill.

Mr. GRAMM. If the Senator will yield, if he will go back and read that newspaper story, he will see that that was not my quote. What I said was printed in the second half of the paragraph.

Mr. MITCHELL. I see.

Mr. GRAMM. I do not doubt the person who used that quote had a reason for using it.

But what I said is that the majority leader's health care plan would, in all probability, bankrupt the country and destroy the greatest health care system in history, which was a strong statement. But the other statement was not my statement.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator disavow the statement by his colleague that my bill would create a Gestapo police in the United States?

Mr. GRAMM. I certainly would not use that word, but the bill would have health care police telling us that we had to buy the majority leader's benefits plan, not the one we chose.

So I can see where people with flowery imaginations and effective vocabularies might conjure up all kinds of images. But lacking both the vocabulary and imagination, I did not conjure up any such images.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I might say that response is as substantive as the Republican bill that is on this scale here.

If I could just briefly—I do not think any of this kind of discussion, gimmicks with scales and pejorative words like "Gestapo" and attacks on others serves any useful purpose and surely does not enhance the stature of the Senate.

I asked for this scale only because I thought the Senator from Texas was trivializing a serious issue.

I renew the appeal I made this morning. This is a very serious matter. It affects every American family. There is ample room for principled disagreement. There is ample room for substantive, reasoned debate.

There is no need for gimmicks. There is no need for pejorative words like "Gestapo," and others, on either side.

We are elected to serve all of the people. I hope that in the next few weeks we can concentrate on the fact that we represent the American people, not on which party we belong to, not on which State we represent, and certainly not to continue to lower ourselves with this kind of gimmick. We can disagree on this bill without this kind of disagreeable action.

I thank my colleagues, and I yield the floor.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, will the distinguished Republican leader yield 1 minute?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

The point I wanted to make was that last night the Republican leader and I were asked to show where these 17 taxes were. The problem is, with what was available last night, it was difficult for me to say where these 17 taxes were because the bill had no page numbers.

So, I asked my staff to try to dig out the taxes so that we could respond to what was a very serious and a very legitimate question that was posed by the White House.

In trying to identify where the taxes were, they came up with a scale, which at that point was the effective way to find the taxes.

What is the point of all of this? The point of all of this is that we need a serious debate. We need a lengthy debate. We need to go through the bill in detail to see that we all know what is there.

But when you get underneath it all, there are 17 taxes here. People need to know what they are so they can decide whether they are trivial, whether they are important, and whether they are burdensome, whether or not what they get from this bill is worth what is they will have to pay. That is a legitimate issue and an issue that must be debated so that we understand it.

I believe in the old biblical admonition: Ye shall know the truth and the truth will make you free.

I believe if we fully understand this bill, we will decide to reject it. And since that is what I believe is in the public interest, I look forward to debating health care legislation when we have the new bill with page numbers, which I understand is now available. At that point, I will not need my scale. I was delighted to lend my scale to the majority leader, but I have reminded him that I have written—and we have copies of—two bills. We have had four other Republicans write health care bills. The Republican leader has written a health care bill which is in line behind the majority leader's bill to be drafted in legislative language. It is not as if there is no alternative.

What is not offered as an alternative is a Government-run system, because we do not want it and the American people do not want it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I could respond, I wish to point out 18 Republican Senators signed their names on a bill introduced last November, all of whom have repudiated the bill now. To say they have introduced the bill, I think, does not mean anything in that context.

So, we are going to have this debate next week. I have been trying to get the health care bill up. It is our colleagues who have asked to delay bringing up the bill. So I do not want any implication left by the Senator that somehow we have been causing this delay. We are going to get to it next Tuesday, if our colleagues do not object, and there will be ample time for everyone to debate it then, and I hope we will do so in a serious and responsible way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. the Senator from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me just set the record straight. I guess I can quote the Governor of New York this morning, who said no bill was better than the Mitchell bill. That is after weighing, I guess, Governor Cuomo trying to satisfy himself today on our side.

I think the facts are that at least at this time we are not in the majority and our bills are drafted last. I would not want to leave the impression that is the only reason our bill is not drafted. We have been told that after they draft the majority leader's bill and after they draft modifications, then they will complete drafting our bill. That is the way it works. We understand that. We are the minority. The Democrats have the majority, and that is why our bill is not here.

And as the majority leader knows, all these things slip from time to time. We thought we would get his earlier. We got it later. That is no problem. But I think the facts are that we have had our material in the drafter's office, but there is only so much they can do.

So I want the RECORD to reflect the reason our bill is not here. And there may be a lot of flaws in our bill, too. I am not suggesting that. I said from the outset this is a very complicated issue, and there are big, big differences in all these bills. I know Members on the other side repudiated the Clinton bill after they cosponsored it. They jumped off the Clinton bill.

We all had changes of positions from certain facts without listening to the American people. The funny thing is when we listen to people who send us here sometime we change our mind. If we do not listen, we put on the narrow glasses right down the beltway and are going to stick with the ideas we had initially.

My view is we are going to have a lot of time for the American people to try to understand what may be in the majority leader's bill and what we call the American option plan and other plans, and I hope and I know that debate will start sometime next week and we are looking forward to it. I think it is going to be a good debate. It does not mean we are not going to have differences. And we are going to spell out those differences, and I hope that we can do that and reach the right conclusion.

But the American people should not be shut out of this process and the American people are not going to be shut out of this process. They have every right to know what is in the majority leader's bill, what may be in the bill I am sponsoring along with 39 of my colleagues, or any other bill that may be offered here as a substitute, or any amendment that may be offered.

This is affecting everybody in America. You cannot shut out the American public. I do not think that is anybody's intent. But when you get a 1,410-page bill—and when you get our bill, I suppose our bill is going to be several hundred pages—you have to wonder how do we have time, unless we are on the Finance Committee, to really understand what may be in that bill.

And I think that is all we are suggesting, let us give the American people a look. Let us let the American people look through our eyes and our reflection, at least, on what may be in a bill that may affect their lives or the lives of their families.

So I just say that we are prepared to do that. I hope we can do it in the spirit the majority leader suggested early this morning.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2464

I intend to offer an amendment on behalf of myself and Senator LIEBERMAN, and others. This amendment should come at no surprise. This amendment provides for the termination of the United States arms embargo on the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina no later than November 15, 1994.

Mr. President, this amendment is intended to set a definitive ending date for the United States arms embargo on Bosnia and Herzegovina. The sponsors of this amendment understand that the United States and the so-called contact group have agreed to a phased approach which may lead to the multilateral lifting of the arms embargo. However, we have no guarantees when this will happen, or, more importantly, if it will happen. And we could be here next year, in the next Congress debating this issue once again—the only difference being it will be year No. 3 and tens of thousands of more Bosnians will have died.

The reality is that only by lifting this illegal and unjust arms embargo on the Bosnians can we hope to eventually have a just resolution of this conflict and avoid sending United States forces to implement a partition of Bosnia.

Today, we learned that the United Nations finally called for limited air strikes against Bosnian Serb military targets—in response to the Bosnian Serbs taking back heavy weapons from a U.N. protected facility in the Sarajevo exclusion zone—and that these strikes took place. While this action is welcome—especially from the perspective of slowing the downward slide of United States and NATO credibility—I am skeptical that this action alone will pressure the Bosnian Serbs into a settlement.

In my view the U.S. Congress can make a critical difference—in letting the Bosnian Serbs know that there is a real deadline—that there is something more definite than continuing meetings of the contact group.

I am aware that House and Senate conferees on the Defense authorize bill are negotiating on language regarding the lifting of the arms embargo. The administration sent its representatives up, including the United States Envoy Ambassador Charles Redman, to persuade the conferees against taking definite action to terminate this illegal and unjust embargo on Bosnia, arguing that a diplomatic process was underway.

With all due respect to the efforts of Ambassador Redman and the others who have participated in the seemingly endless rounds of diplomatic negotiation, I hope that the conferees will put more weight on the administration's track record in influencing the allies, and on the events in Bosnia right now—rather than, once again, placing their hopes in a diplomatic process that is not backed by anything more than promises of action some time in the undefined future.

We need to take real action—to take action beyond issuing statements and communiques. By adopting a provision to definitively end the United States arms embargo on Bosnia—even if it is several months away; I said November 15—we can truly change the dynamic of the process and put some real pressure on the Bosnian Serbs. We can also give the administration some real leverage in its attempt to get the allies to forsake their failed policies.

Mr. President, I know that my friend from Connecticut, Senator LIEBERMAN wanted to speak on this. What I would suggest is that I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it printed. I may not offer it on this bill, I say to my friend from Iowa. If there is some chance that we may get to the DOD authorization bill on Monday, then I would wait and offer the amendment on that. I think it more properly belongs on that appropriations bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be printed in the RECORD. I am offering the amendment for myself, Senator LIBERMAN, Senator MCCAIN, Senator MOYNIHAN, and Senator DECONCINI.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 2464

At the appropriate place, add the following:

SEC. . TERMINATION OF ARMS EMBARGO.

(1) TERMINATION.—The President shall terminate the United States arms embargo on the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina no later than November 15, 1994 so that Government may exercise its right of self-defense under Article 51 of the United Nations Charter.

(2) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term 'United States arms embargo of the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina' means the application to the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina of—

(A) the policy adopted July 10, 1991, and published in the Federal Register of July 19, 1991 (58 F.R. 33322) under the heading 'Suspension of Munitions Export Licenses to Yugoslavia'; and

(B) any similar policy being applied by the United States Government as of the date of receipt of the request described in paragraph (1) pursuant to request described in paragraph (1) pursuant to which approval is denied for transfers of defense articles and defense services to the former Yugoslavia.

(3) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as authorization for deployment of United States forces in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina for any purpose, including training, support, or delivery of military equipment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, we are trying to make progress on this bill. As I previously indicated to the distinguished Republican leader, if we can get a list that will give us a finite time for finishing, we will do so.

But I want to make clear to colleagues who are considering their schedules, if we cannot get such a list, then we will have to remain in session today and there will then be further votes today, including procedural votes, to move this measure forward.

We want to try to make progress on the bill. We are working on trying to get a list now, I understand.

I want to make clear, before any Senators leave, that we will proceed and have votes unless we can make some determination as to when the bill will be completed and what amendments will be remaining on it.

This is to answer several questions which Senators have asked me on the subject.

Mr. DOLE. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. As I understand it, we have just now cleared the list we have been talking about back and forth with the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Pennsylvania. We think we now have a list that we can provide to both managers. I think it is in accordance with what we discussed this morning.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague.

Why do we not review that and then, as soon as possible, I will make an announcement with respect to the rest of the schedule.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I would like to comment briefly on what the majority leader has said—if I might have the attention of the majority leader—on the health issue.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have to review the list that was given us so I can make an announcement with respect to our schedule. I ask the Senator if he would not mind withholding for a minute until I get that done.

Mr. SPECTER. I will gladly withhold until I can get the attention of the majority leader on the issue of health reform legislation.

Mr. DECONCINI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I join the distinguished Republican leader and the Senator from Connecticut in the amendment that they have sent to the desk. Where it appears really does not make much difference to this Senator.

It is encouraging, I think, the early report that there have been limited air strikes by NATO against some Bosnia Serbian positions today. I think that is significant.

All of the details are not available yet of what provoked that, except reports that the Bosnian Serbian militia or military took some foreign military equipment—I believe a tank—and as retaliation, NATO responded.

I am pleased to see NATO and the allies demonstrate some courage, some determination, some leadership, some desire or some demonstration to stand behind what they have said they have been going to do for about 10 months now.

I think it is necessary for us to move unilaterally, if there is no other way, to let the Bosnian people protect themselves and arm and participate in a genocidal civil war that is going on and has been going on for almost 3 years now.

We have seen time and time again the failure of the Serbs and the Bosnian Serbs to respond to any kind of threat or potential threat from the allies.

I understand our President's problem; that he wants to deal in the international area with a multilateral effort toward the Serbs, both the Bosnian Serbs and the Serbs, perhaps, and he wants to maintain the multinational effort. But the reality here is that the multinational effort is a failure. It has not brought about peace. It has not stopped the genocide, the murder, and the rape. It has not curtailed the violence.

What it has done is it has captured and put into a box the Moslems, the Bosnian Moslem people. They cannot even defend themselves with the least bit of dignity of an attempt to demonstrate that they are fighting for their sovereign country.

This peace accord that has been offered is no great shape. After all, the Serbian efforts will end up with 50 percent of the country. And the reason they have not gone along with it is because they now have 71 percent of the country.

So this is no great victory for the Bosnians. It is a huge defeat for the Bosnians and a huge defeat for the world.

But it is the last effort that has been presented to the parties involved there. And now for the Serbian Bosnians to refuse to participate, it is time that we lift that embargo and do it unilaterally, if necessary.

I am glad to join the distinguished Republican leader.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, this is the fourth or fifth time that a bipartisan group of Members of the Chamber have joined together.

Mr. GRASSLEY addressed the Chair.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I yield at this time for a brief statement from the Senator from Iowa, retaining my right to the floor.

GRASSLEY-HARKIN AMENDMENT REGARDING PERSONAL PROTECTION FOR CABINET AND SUBCABINET OFFICIALS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I just wanted to say a few brief words regarding an amendment that my good friend Senator HARKIN and I have drafted regarding personal protection for cabinet and subcabinet officials. It is my understanding that the amendment will be part of the committee's amendments.

The amendment does two things: First, it asks the General Accounting Office to review the need for personal protection for cabinet and subcabinet officials.

There are certainly cabinet officials who need personal protection. However, I am concerned that for some it may just be an expensive perk. These personal security details cost the American taxpayer up to $500,000 per year for each individual who receives protection. GAO will help Congress determine whether this is money well spent.

The second part of the amendment ensures that the Office of the Inspector General at HHS does not have to foot the bill for the personal protection of the Secretary at HHS. I am concerned that the limited resources of the Inspector General should not be further reduced due to the additional responsibility of providing security protection for the Secretary.

I am pleased that Senator HARKIN has joined me in offering this amendment, and thank him for his support.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, retaining my right to the floor, I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. AKAKA). The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, in the past, I voted against the Dole-Lieberman-DeConcini amendment. I voted against it because I believed we ought to be acting with other nations on this and should not be unilaterally pulling back on this arms embargo.

But, frankly, the last time I had a very difficult time making a decision. Warren Christopher called me and assured me that since the Russians were involved, we were very close to working out a peace agreement. I agreed I would, one more time, vote with the administration on this.

But, frankly, now with the rejection by the Bosnian Serbs of that peace agreement and the shooting down of the U.N. helicopter, I think our choice is clear. I think we have to send a strong message to the Bosnian Serbs that they had better get their house in order and sit down and agree to the peace agreement.

I will be voting for the Dole-Lieberman amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague from Illinois for that strong statement of principle. I am sure it will echo not only throughout our Government here in Washington, but I hope throughout the councils of governments in the Balkans.

This is the fourth or fifth time that a group of us, working on a bipartisan basis, has brought an amendment onto the floor in one form or another to direct our Government to unilaterally lift the arms embargo against the Bosnian Government—a duly constituted Government, a member of the United Nations—imposed in 1991 actually against the former Yugoslavia, as an attempt to keep the United States from being part of, and the world from being part of the pouring of weapons into that region with the hope we could diminish the conflict there.

Obviously, those hopes were never realized. Perhaps they were naive. I know they were well intended. In any case, they were not successful.

Nonetheless, we have continued to impose an embargo, which is to say a prohibition against supplying arms to the Bosnian Moslems, while it is very clear that the Bosnian Serbs, through supplies from Serbia and with their own capacity—a historic capacity to build arms—have had the weapons they have needed.

We have now had several votes on this issue. One was 50 to 49 against lifting the arms embargo unilaterally. The last one was a 50-50 tie—it failed on a tied vote—while another amendment, which was a sense-of-the-Senate resolution, passed 52 to 48.

So now we come again at a particularly pressing and important moment because, as has been said by the Senator from Illinois, the Senate Republican leader, and my colleague and friend from Arizona, Mr. DECONCINI, the peace plan agreed to by the contact group which we are part of and to which we were deferring was accepted by the Bosnian Moslems even though it yields a substantial part of their territory taken by force by the Bosnian Serbs. But they have accepted it.

The Bosnian Serbs have rejected it, essentially thumbing their noses once again at the world community, finding excuses—the latest being a referendum they would hold at the end of the month of August. But the message is clear, and particularly clear when combined with their reviving—poor choice of word, really, to use, revive—but beginning again the siege of Sarajevo, attacks, ethnic cleansing in villages, the whole series of acts of aggression by the Bosnian Serbs; showing again, as has been clear throughout, that the only way the Bosnian Serbs will respond and play by the rules of civilized international relations is at the point of a gun in response to the actual use of force or the threat of force.

That is why we are back with this amendment. That is why I so greatly appreciate the support of the Senator from Illinois. It gives me confidence this may pass on this occasion.

Mr. WARNER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I will, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMON). The Senator yields for a question.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, it appears to me the Senator, in fairness to our colleagues, should indicate that he and I, Senator GRAMM, Senator NUNN, Senator LEVIN, and Senator KEMPTHORNE, are representing the Senate conferees in a House-Senate conference on the DOD authorization bill. We made considerable progress here in the last several days in our efforts to reach a compromise between the two Chambers, and to have an expression, hopefully, to be accepted by the Congress as a whole and pass to a policy.

The distinguished Republican leader, in his remarks, indicated that Ambassador Redman had been down several times. Indeed, he has, together with representatives of the Department of Defense. And we are making progress.

It seems to me, in fairness, the Senator from Connecticut should make reference to that; and that the President is going to be forthcoming, I am hopeful today, in a letter to the leadership of the Congress, expressing his commitment to take certain steps with respect to approaching the United Nations on a multinational lifting of the embargo, if such steps as the diplomats are now taking with the contact group prove not to be fruitful.

So I think in fairness to the Senate, we should be informed that there is a good deal going on, on a parallel track to the amendment being offered now by the distinguished Republican leader and others.

I must say the sentiment in the Chamber is moving towards that espoused by the distinguished Republican leader. But the bottom line is we must be very careful in such legislative action as we may take not to indicate that the United States is moving in and taking over responsibility for this conflict.

Time and time again, I say to my good friend from Connecticut, we have received communications from Great Britain and France and other nations regarding their desire to continue to pursue the diplomatic process, and certainly to allow sufficient time to reach a plan, if necessary, for the extraction of the UNPROFOR forces, which are imperiled in terms of their own personal individual safety, along with organizations from many other nations there trying to help in this tragic situation.

So this is a very important step that the Congress must contemplate with regard to the Republican leader's amendment, as well as the recommendations I anticipate will be forthcoming from the group on which the Senator and I are working on the Armed Forces conference.

So I ask the Senator, is it not fair that we should mention that here?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. The Senator from Virginia is quite correct. That was the next point I was going to make in my remarks, to explain what is not only happening, but why the Senate Republican leader and others are offering this amendment.

On the defense authorization bill, the House of Representatives passed an amendment directing that the arms embargo against Bosnia be lifted. It passed by 66 votes. In this Chamber a similar amendment failed, and on a 52-48 vote, a sense-of-the-Senate amendment, cosponsored by the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee and the Senator from Virginia was adopted urging steps be taken multilaterally and, if not, perhaps consulting as to unilateral steps.

Mr. President, it appears clear to me, and I believe others who are involved in the House-Senate conference on the Department of Defense authorization bill that progress is being made. And yet, it is highly unlikely that the conferees will agree on a section of this amendment that would deal with the ultimate unilateral lifting of the arms embargo.

In fact, as the Senator from Virginia has said, and I am encouraged to join him in reporting, there are some forward steps that are part of this amendment, authored substantially by the Senator from Georgia, the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, which would urge the administration to go to the United Nations to seek multilateral support which would offer some other interim steps, short of lifting the arms embargo, but which would move us toward providing some assistance to the Bosnian Moslems who have been the victims of this aggression and, as a result of the embargo, have had one arm tied behind their backs.

The last step which we had hoped for from the Armed Services conference appears to be out of reach of consensus, and that is, if all other steps fail, then in the final analysis, there ought to be a unilateral lifting of the arms embargo by the United States.

Why? In the first instance, the embargo is not just a policy or something that is written on a piece of paper. It has real effect. There are at this moment military personnel of the United States in the waters off the former Yugoslavia that are enforcing the arms embargo. Our arms, our hands, our fingerprints are on the enforcement of that embargo. In that sense, we are not, unfortunately, neutral in this conflict. Though the embargo was originally adopted as an act of presumed neutrality, it is affecting only one side in this war, and that is the Bosnian Moslem side.

The second point is this, Mr. President. It appears from what we hear from the former Yugoslavia, beginning with a statement by Secretary General Boutros-Ghali, that the U.N. forces in Bosnia, the UNPROFOR forces may, indeed, be seriously considering leaving the ground. In fact, the Secretary General has raised the question about whether the U.N. forces can handle the next stage and should there not be a joint military force put together by the member nations of the contact group.

What troubles a lot of us here, and in part it has motivated the interim steps that are going to be part of, I hope, the Armed Services conference committee, is that we run the risk of the U.N. forces withdrawing and the arms embargo against Bosnian Moslems will still be in effect inviting the Bosnian Serbs to move aggressively and quickly against their opponents, who will still not have adequate arms to defend themselves. Essentially, the Bosnian Moslems will be left without arms in a very vulnerable situation.

Those are the two reasons, combined with the fact that the history of this conflict shows that the only time the Bosnian Serbs have acted with a hint of responsibility has been when they feared they would suffer genuine consequences at the point of a gun.

So this amendment is actually meant to complement and be the final step in the process that I believe and hope will be set in motion by the Armed Services Committee conference report.

Incidentally, responding to the concern of the Senator from Virginia about our allies and assuring that they have time to leave, this amendment intentionally states that the embargo should not be lifted until November 15, 1994, which leaves a good 90 days, which was the outer limit, as I have heard in testimony from representatives of our allies in Britain and France, of what they needed for them to leave and for others to leave.

For all these reasons, I am pleased to join with the Senate Republican leader and my other colleagues—I see my friend from Delaware who has been a leader, a tremendous leader, in this effort—to finally seize the moment, send a message. And in the war that I fear is coming to the Balkans, that we not inadvertently put ourselves on the side of the aggressors by continuing to tie the hands of the victims, the Bosnian Moslems, behind their backs because they do not have the arms with which to satisfy the fundamental, moral right they have to defend themselves, their country, and their families.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut is right. This has been going on a long time. It will be 2 years ago next month that this Chamber passed an amendment, it became law—urging then President Bush to lift the ill-advised embargo that his administration had signed us on to, and to point out and give him the authority to transfer up to $50 million in arms to the Bosnian Government.

Since that day, I have heard repeatedly on this floor at various intervals everything from "air strikes do not work, they are all bad, it is a civil war, they are all doing it, the United States should not offend its allies, the allies are about to move, air strikes are about to take place"—and it went on, and on, ad nauseam.

Now 200,000 Bosnian civilian dead later, we are told, "let it go on and on and on" by the diplomats who have shown no courage whatsoever in terms of committing to principle that they will somehow find a way in the next weeks or months.

Mr. President, I hope nobody any longer argues who the aggressor is here. I hope we have stopped that malarkey. I hope the clear showing, undisputed showing, which I pointed out over 2 years ago on this floor, that the Serbs in Bosnia were running concentration camps, extermination camps, rape camps, and death camps, is no longer disputed. I challenge anyone in the U.S. Senate or the U.S. Congress to debate me on that subject. Give me one shred of evidence that genocide is not a policy, that it is merely a dream of the Bosnian Serbs. In fact, it is a reality.

I refer to yesterday—a presumptuous thing to do—to a speech I made in the RECORD outlining in great detail the proof of the existence of these extermination camps that are no different, other than in volume, than camps that existed in Central Europe in the early forties.

I hope nobody any longer is going to wonder whether or not the Bosnian Serbs want peace. The contact group, having entered into what I consider to be a 1994 version of Munich, carved up the Nation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and said, "Here, Serbia, Serbians, take 49 percent." In principle, that is outrageous, just to have done that, like we did to Czechoslovakia in the thirties.

But even with that, the Serbs in Bosnia said, "No dice," and voted unanimously. Now enters Milosevic, that great leader, patriotic leader, the butcher of Belgrade who now says he is angry with the Bosnian Serbs and he is going to, as evidence of his desire for peace, tell them since they did not accept the agreement, he is out.

Well, let me remind my colleagues. He said that a year ago. He agreed a year ago that he would allow U.N. observers to be at the head of the bridges crossing the Drina River from Serbia into Bosnia. So we all said, "Oh, no"—not all of us, LIEBERMAN, DECONCINI, BIDEN, the Republican leader, and others said we did not believe it. But everybody else said, "Oh, no. Reason is on the horizon."

As soon as everything settled down, he said, "No. Did I really say I would let observers be here? I didn't really mean that." And the whole world stood by and went, "Oh, well, I guess it is not a big deal. He doesn't have to do it."

And now we are told, I am told by administration officials and others, "Lay off. We're almost there. Look at what Milosevic has done." I have never on the floor of the Senate said anything like this about anyone at all. Milosevic is a liar. Milosevic's record is replete with lies. He has done nothing but lie. I will be delighted, and I pray for the body and soul of innocent people in Bosnia, that I can come back on the floor a month from now and say, "I apologize this time to Milosevic. He did not lie." It will be the happiest recantation I have ever engaged in, and like most mortals I have had to recant.

But he is a liar. There is nothing, nothing in his public actions of the last 2 years that would lead any reasonable man or woman anywhere in the world to conclude that he knows how to tell the truth. But we are now told, "Milosevic says this time he means it."

We just spent a year passing a bill that many on this floor helped me work on, the Violence Against Women Act. We heard repeated testimony from women who were beaten, but they would say, "This time it won't happen again." That is what Milosevic reminds me of this time. I have a friend who happens to be my administrative assistant, Ted Kaufman, a man of great wisdom, in my view. He says, "The ability of human beings to rationalize defies reason." We are defying reason because we are continuing to rationalize now that Milosevic has seen the Lord.

The second point that I would make—and I see others ready to speak so I will stop within the next 3 minutes—the second point I would make is to compliment my friends on the resolution, and to hope that subparagraph 3 means what I think it means. It reads:

> Rule of construction. Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as authorization for deployment of United States forces in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina for any purpose including training, support, or delivery of military equipment.

I am told by the authors—to be more precise, the staff of the authors—that that does not preclude the participation of United States aircraft in NATO air strikes, because my friend from Connecticut is correct. We are going to go through an interim period here where the Bosnian Serbs are going to go for broke with the blessing of Serbia, and if it is done at a time before the arms embargo is lifted, but without United States-aided NATO air cover, we will see carnage beyond what we now have.

The last point, and I will cease and desist, this is not Vietnam. I came here at the end of the Vietnam war as a 30-year-old United States Senator. I had heard for 6 years as a young man in college and law school about the Vietnamization program. That was the program whereby my generation was told if we just stick in with 500,000 troops long enough the Vietnamese will begin to fight their own battles.

They never were able to do that. Make no mistake about it. I have been to Bosnia twice. I have met with all of the leaders that I am aware of, including the Bosnian Government's military forces as well. These folks are willing and able to fight. They outnumber the Serbs about 3 or 5 to 1 in terms of the army, depending on what number you pick. But they are the equivalent of fighting a smaller force with heavy artillery against a larger force with Remington rifles. They have no equipment. Give them the equipment and they will take care of themselves without a single solitary U.S. soldier needed. Let them retrieve their country. Let them defend themselves. Let us get on with it.

I compliment Senator DOLE and Senator LIEBERMAN and others. This, if anything, is an incredible compromise which I am prepared to support beyond what any of us want here. We are giving these folks until November 15. I love Secretary Christopher. There is no bigger ally of the President of the United States on this floor than me, save possibly the majority leader. But they have been wrong on this issue. It is time they move on this issue. We give them every possibility.

When I asked Mr. Izetbegovic, the President of Bosnia, and Mr. Silajdzic, the Prime Minister, a year ago and again asked them a couple months ago when Senator DOLE and I were in Sarajevo, "What do you want? If the embargo is lifted and that causes UNPROFOR to leave, what do you want?" They said, "Send UNPROFOR home." I have another way of saying it. If UNPROFOR cannot be part of the solution, they are part of the problem. Now they are part of the problem. They should go home. Our European friends would no longer be able to continue to hide behind them as a rationale for lifting the embargo. Lift the embargo. Engage in air strikes. Let the Bosnian Moslems fight for their survival.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

I have a question I would like to pose for clarification purposes to some of the introducers of the resolution. Senator LIEBERMAN was on the floor a moment ago. And he is here now.

Will the Senator answer this question for me, a question or two. As the Senator from Connecticut knows, the Senator from Nebraska did not support, for reasons that I stated clearly on this floor, the previous motions that have been advanced principally by the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Kansas. As I understand the amendment that Senators are going to offer at this juncture, it is significantly different from the preceding amendments that were offered by Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator DOLE because I believe, and do I believe correctly, that previously the amendments or motions or sense of the Senate alluded to or directed or suggested an immediate unilateral lifting of the embargo?

As I read the motion, it is significantly different since it is not immediate; it says no later than November 15. Is that not a significant difference from what you offered previously?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, responding to my friend from Nebraska, the Senator from Nebraska is absolutely right. The previous amendments on this subject either called for or directed the immediate or almost immediate lifting of the embargo, say, 30 days forward.

This version, this amendment today, puts it off until November 15. It does so for two reasons. One is that the allies involved in the U.N. forces, who appear to be heading toward exiting from Bosnia, pursuant to statements that have been made by the Secretary General of the United Nations, have said that they and all others there as part of the UNPROFOR forces could be out within 90 days. So the sponsors of the amendment wanted not to impede that process. This is a result of conversations with European allies and also with the representatives of the administration who have stressed this point.

Second, the Senator from Nebraska is a leading member of the Senate Armed Services Committee and knows that the conference is going on with the DOD authorization bill. The conferees are working on a section on Bosnia. That section, in my opinion, will not end with the unilateral lifting of the embargo. It will have a series of steps toward assisting the Bosnian Moslems, but these steps will not end with the unilateral lifting of the embargo.

So the intent of this amendment is to be the final step if all other attempts to arrive at a multilateral agreement are unsuccessful. It is a way to say both to our allies and to those who are the aggressors there that the United States means business and this cannot go on in a twilight zone with a lot of uncertainty; that we want to, in the words of the Bible, sound a certain trumpet that on November 15, all else failing—and by that I mean the failure of the Bosnian Serbs to accept the peace plan as the Bosnian Moslems have, or the failure of the United Nations to multilaterally lift the embargo—then the United States would go ahead and do it.

Mr. EXON. I appreciate the explanation of what I thought was the basic thrust or change in position. Basically, this amendment is a recognition, I believe directly or indirectly, by intent or by happenstance, this amendment takes into consideration the concerns that this Senator and members of the Armed Services Committee—including this one who is working right now on the wording—have on the Bosnian problem that appeared in both the House authorization bill and the Senate authorization bill.

The concern that I and others have expressed on many occasions is that the Senator from Connecticut is saying—with the hope, I take it, that we will not lift this unilaterally, which has been the position of France and Great Britain. Many of our allies who are there with troops on the ground under the auspices of the United Nations have been steadfastly against unilateral action immediately because they felt that would put the troops that they have there in harm's way. And it was demonstrated that they are in harm's way with two more warlike actions by the Serbs that we all recognize cannot be tolerated.

Is it fair for me to assume that the concept of this new amendment is that the Senator from Connecticut and Senator DOLE and others sponsoring this hope and believe that the amendment offered in the new fashion will give us, the United Nations, our NATO allies, and others a chance to get the troops out, to get the forces out? Then we would have eliminated that problem that was reiterated to the members of the Armed Services Committee within the week by the Defense Minister from France: "Please don't take unilateral action."

What the Senator from Connecticut is really saying, if I understand this correctly, is that, all right, you are giving a significant amount of time for all of that to take place, but you are in essence saying, but if it does not take place—and we have been legitimately upset, as outlined by the Senator from Delaware, about all of the delays—that unless all of this works out notwithstanding anything else, we are giving sufficient notice and, on November 15, if all else fails, we take the unilateral action of lifting the embargo. Is that a fair summation of what this says?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has stated it exactly as is the intention of the sponsors, that we want to see the embargo, the prohibition against selling arms, transferring arms to the Bosnian Moslems, lifted multilaterally if at all possible, but unilaterally if necessary. And the timing here is meant to respond to the concerns of our allies, who seem ever more inclined to withdraw from Bosnia, to have the time to do so.

I say to my friend from Nebraska that this amendment is also in response to concerns of the Armed Services Committee leadership that it would be impossible to include the unilateral lifting of the embargo in the conference report on the Department of Defense authorization bill and, in fact, that it could jeopardize the bill in some way. So, let us take the steps we are taking and go separately on the question of ultimately lifting the arms embargo.

I say, finally, that there was a very telling and significant statement today on the wires from the Foreign Secretary of the United Kingdom, who said, though he has opposed lifting the arms embargo, that he now feels it may be unavoidable to lift it.

So I think that, in response to the intransigence of the Bosnian Serbs, their refusal to accept the peace plan, the aggression by the Bosnian Serbs, our allies in Europe, our closest allies, are coming to the conclusion that lifting the arms embargo may, in fact, be unavoidable.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota has asked if he could have 30 seconds to ask a question. Could I yield to him for that purpose without losing my right to the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. AKAKA). The Senator from Nebraska has that right.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I say to my colleague from Washington, I am not about to give a speech. I have to leave town. I just wanted to have one clarification.

I assumed that this course, if by some chance the Serbs were to accept the contact group proposal, then this resolution would no longer apply. Is that correct? It is probably an obvious question. I want to be clear about it.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. The Senator from Minnesota is correct. That is the intention of the sponsors. It builds on what we expect to be the report of the conference committee on the Department of Defense authorization bill.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank the Senator from Nebraska. I say to my good friend from Connecticut, as he well knows, this has been a very central issue to me. I have agonized over this for all sorts of different reasons.

I would very much like to be included as a cosponsor of this resolution.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. He has approached this issue with thoughtfulness and real sincerity. I very much appreciate his support, and will be proud to add him as a cosponsor.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I simply would like to say to my colleague from the great State of Connecticut that, given the explanation that he has provided me with in this instance—and I think that has overcome reasons that I have previously stated on the floor in opposing the amendments by Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator DOLE and others—I think he has a good amendment that addresses my concerns and the reasons that I opposed it in the past.

Therefore, I ask at this time without objection that I be added as a cosponsor of the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLE. We are happy to have the Senator from Nebraska as a cosponsor.

Mr. EXON. Let me try and clarify one other thing here that I have questioned regarding No. 3:

> Rule of construction. Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as authorization for deployment of United States forces in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina for any purpose, including training, support, or delivery of military equipment.

Does that mean that if everything works between now and November 15, or if no later than November 15, on November 16, that the United States is sending a signal here, loud and clear, to the forces that are being devastated by Serbians, their aggression, their refusal to enter into a peace agreement that I thought was fair and reasonable under the circumstances—and the deadline was last Saturday and they failed—does that section (3) indicate that the United States of America is sending a signal to the forces that we are trying to be helpful to, namely, the Bosnian Moslems, that we are not going to assist them, that they will have to get arms and equipment from other sources if the embargo is lifted? What is the reason for that part (3), and does it not send a signal, intentionally or otherwise, to the Bosnian Moslems that we are not going to help?

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, for the third time in 4 months, we are being asked to vote to lift the arms embargo against Bosnia unilaterally. On two previous occasions—in May and in July—the Senate voted on messages which would have required the President to lift the embargo unilaterally. I ask my colleagues: how much time should we spend once again debating and voting on this same issue?

As my colleagues are aware, the last time we considered this issue, we defeated an amendment to the Defense Department authorization bill that would have instructed the President to go it alone in lifting the embargo. That bill is currently in conference, and it is my understanding that compromise language is being worked out to reconcile the different House and Senate language related to the arms embargo. Those who feel strongly about the arms embargo and who wish to press another vote on this issue have the opportunity, in considering the Department of Defense conference report, to cast their vote based on the arms embargo language.

Accordingly, I do not see why we should move ahead with this vote today, particularly on a day when the international community has demonstrated its resolve to enforce the U.N. ultimatum against the Bosnian Serbs. Earlier today, we learned that NATO planes struck Bosnian Serb targets near Sarajevo. Press reports indicate that the airstrikes occurred in response to blatant Bosnian Serb defiance of the U.N.-imposed exclusion zone around Sarajevo. On a day of demonstrated cohesion among our NATO allies, why on earth would we want to pass legislation instructing our President to go it alone in Bosnia?

Today's action follows last weekend's meeting of the foreign ministers of the contact group countries in which the ministers agreed on a series of steps to take in response to the continued Bosnian Serb rejection of their July 6 settlement plan. While I must say that I remain quite skeptical of his sincerity, I do nonetheless, welcome Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic's apparent attempts to distance himself from the Bosnian Serbs. If Milosevic does follow through on his promises to break off relations with his cohorts in Bosnia, it is in no small measure due to the unified efforts of the contact group. Milosevic's pressure on the Bosnian Serbs, if genuine, could in turn, help pressure the Bosnian Serbs to accept the contact group plan.

The points for and against lifting the arms embargo unilaterally have been made on previous occasions. I would simply say at this juncture, urging unilateral action would be a reckless step that would undermine the very actions that NATO took today and that the contact group continues to take. I would urge my colleagues to oppose the amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I will oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

At the outset, let me state that I completely agree with the general principle asserted by my friend from Pennsylvania—that in the absence of an affirmative congressional vote, the President does not now possess the power to authorize the use of force in Haiti.

On this point, the U.S. Constitution is as clear as it is plain. Article one, section eight, grants to Congress the power to "Declare war [and] grant letters of marque and reprisal." Article two, section two provides that the President shall be the "Commander-in-

To be sure, the Commander in Chief power ensures that the President has the sole power to direct American military forces in combat. But that power has effect only after the proper authorization has been provided by Congress. Until that authority is granted, the President has no inherent power to send forces to war—except in certain situations, such as to repel sudden attacks or to protect the safety and security of Americans abroad.

On this point, the words of Alexander Hamilton, a strong defender of presidential power, are instructive. Writing in Federalist No. 69, Hamilton emphasized that the President's power as Commander in Chief would be "much inferior" to that of the British King, amounting to "nothing more than the supreme command and direction of the military and naval forces."

Moreover, the U.N. Security Council resolution authorizing the use of all necessary means to facilitate the return of the legitimate government in Haiti does not provide the President any legal authority under the Constitution—as the Senate stated in a unanimous vote on Wednesday.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania is axiomatic—it states that the President does not have the authority to use force in Haiti unless it is authorized by Congress in advance. That goes without saying—because it is precisely what the war power clause of the Constitution states.

But there is a danger in stating that proposition by means of this amendment. The danger is this: By using a statute to prevent the President from using force in Haiti, the Senate would be implying that the President does have the authority to use force elsewhere in the world. Taken to its logical conclusion, the Specter amendment issues a blanket invitation to the President to use force anywhere, at anytime—unless Congress makes a statement to the contrary.

I believe the Constitution already makes such a statement. The President has no inherent authority to use force, except in certain limited circumstances, unless Congress provides it.

Mr. President, based on a similar vote that this body conducted on June 29, I expect that the Specter amendment will not be accepted. If that does occur, I urge the President and his advisers not to misinterpret the vote. It does not mean that Congress has given him a blank check to use force in Haiti. I believe strongly that the President has no such authority—and that he must come to Congress to seek it.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I see the manager of the bill standing, and I will speak briefly. Responding to the Senator from Nebraska, the intention of the section (3) of this amendment is to make clear that what is being directed here is a lifting of the embargo. It would depend on later action as to whether the United States itself would transfer arms, but the intention of section (3) is to make clear that in no event are personnel of the United States military to become involved on the ground in Bosnia. This is not a war that the United States intends to, or should, fight.

The fact is that the Bosnian Moslems themselves, in appealing to us to lift the embargo and send them arms, have said we do not want your soldiers. They want the arms with which to defend themselves. Section (3) is meant to make this clear.

If, pursuant to other legislation or by act of the President as Commander in Chief, we decided to transfer arms to the Bosnians and train them, that would be done away from the battlefields—perhaps in Croatia, which is now aligned with Bosnia. We are talking about weapons, and we are specifically saying we are not talking about American soldiers fighting in the Balkans. It is not our fight in that sense. This section would prohibit the disposition and movement of American personnel to that battleground.

Mr. EXON. I Thank the Senator for that explanation. I will address that a little further, if I might.

It seems to me that we should be very careful. What I like about that part (3) is that it emphasizes, once again, what this Senator has always maintained—that under no circumstances should we be involved on the ground with troops in Bosnia, save some kind of a universal breakout of peace that we could be there for humanitarian assistance under United Nation's auspices. But I have always been against any kind of ground activity or involvement by the United States. So that is why I have been somewhat protective of the British, French, and others, who do have people in harm's way there.

I have often said to people who want to rush in there: Supposing we had troops under the auspices of the United Nations in Bosnia today and the Brits and French had none there, and the Brits and French were saying, "Lift the embargo" and we would be saying, "What are you talking about? Lifting the embargo would further expand the dangers to our people in harm's way." I guess, therefore, I have come to the realization that this is a reasonable proposal. That is why I am going on it.

In closing, let me say one other thing. I think this is a pretty historic time in history. The Senator from Delaware—and I do not know whether he was old enough to remember it or not—referenced Neville Chamberlain coming back after his historic meeting with Adolf Hitler, and he said that he had arranged peace in our time by the sellout of Czechoslovakia. I was a very young lad at that time, but I remember that very vividly. History has taught us that, if anything else, that was the forerunner to the certainty of World War II, which was a tragedy for mankind under any measurement.

I simply say that I think this is a time when the United Nations, the United States of America, our allies, including our new understandings with the former Soviet Union, and other peoples, had better recognize that unless some punishment is dealt, and dealt rather decisively, not with ground troops but with sustained bombings of Bosnian Serb positions, not just on the battlefield, but if we are going to pull out of there with lifting the embargo, then I suspect that we should be prepared to maybe try to teach the Bosnian Serbs a lesson with air power and air bombardment, not just on the front line, but on their military installations, their rail centers, their communication centers, their military depots, to try to do what we can, at some risk to our airmen, to destroy the war machine that I am very fearful will cut a bloody path—more bloody than in the past—against the Bosnian Moslems, unless we are prepared to take action.

If that happens and if, because of our action, or lack thereof, the world will see the United Nations, the NATO alliance, and everyone standing by while an evil nation like the Bosnian Serbs grab off and kill and destroy further, I think it might send a very unfortunate signal to the people of the world in other spots in the world today—for pointed reasons I will not mention—but I think are known to all, that the United Nations, the NATO allies, and the United States is not a paper tiger, and we can do anything we want and we can get by with it, as evidenced by their failure in Bosnia. I think we are doing historic things here, and I hope that everyone realizes and recognizes that just by unilaterally lifting the embargo, we have not washed our hands of the situation, and say look we won and go home.

With that, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the amendment, and I thank the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Kansas, and others, for crafting this which I think, given the circumstances that we face now, is a good amendment.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I have a colloquy I am going to enter into with the very patient Senator from Idaho, who has been waiting a long time, after which I will propound a unanimous-consent request dealing with the amendments as remain on the Labor-HHS bill.

So, Mr. President, I will now at least enter the colloquy with my colleague from Idaho.

LABOR DEPARTMENT REGULATIONS

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, during committee consideration of this legislation an issue came to my attention regarding a Department of Labor safety regulation—Hazardous Occupation Order No. 12. It was adopted in 1954 and prohibits 16- and 17-year-olds from loading or operating balers—the machines used to compress and bundle waste paper or cardboard destined for recycling.

It has been suggested that the safety of certain balers has increased greatly because safety design standards have been developed since HO 12 was adopted 40 years ago. It has been suggested that HO 12 should be modified to allow teenagers to load balers that meet American National Standards Institute Safety standards. It has also been suggested that these new balers cannot be operated during the loading process. But there has never been a review of baler safety along with an analysis of accident data to see if the regulation can be updated to reflect the design improvements.

The safety of young workers is very important to all of us and their welfare should not be compromised. But ongoing enforcement of HO 12 has led to very heavy levels of fines in the grocery industry, to the point of where they say they are reluctant to hire teenagers. This concerns me. We all know how job opportunities for young Americans are badly needed. I want to get to the bottom of this issue to see whether modern balers still pose risks.

The Department does have underway an advance notice of proposed rulemaking covering all the hazardous occupation orders. The report accompanying our bill contains the committee's request that the Department let us know within 90 days whether or not it intends to move ahead with a formal review of HO 12. We look forward to that report. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I wish to commend Chairman HARKIN for the inclusion of the committee report language on Hazardous Occupation Order No. 12. This is an important issue for me because I have been hearing about this issue from grocery store owners from my State of Idaho for several years.

A thorough review and revision of this regulation is long overdue. However, I am concerned that we are likely to see more fines being assessed against employers who earnestly are doing everything possible to provide a safe working environment. This is going on right now in Georgia, Tennessee, and elsewhere, and I am concerned about the unfairness of questionable enforcement continuing during the entire regulatory review process.

If we are serious about trying to encourage job opportunities for young people in the supermarket and other industries, I suggest that DOL should not impose fines, with respect to minor employees who are loading paper and cardboard into balers or compactors which meet current safety standards.

Under the most current industry safety standards issued by the American National Standards Institute, modern balers and compactors work just like the microwave ovens or trash compactor in the kitchen of the typical American home. If the door is open, and items are being loaded or removed, a lockout-interlock system prevents the machine from operating. You can not turn it on unless the door is closed.

Obviously, workplace safety is of the utmost importance. But safety is not promoted by imposing fines in circumstances where there is no risk of injury.

It is true that DOL has solicited public input about possible changes to the entire, broad range of child labor regulations. This, however, is no guarantee that DOL will focus specifically on HO 12.

Back in 1992, I contacted both DOL and the White House and had received assurances from the previous administration that HO 12 would be reviewed and revised. Nothing happened. I do not want history to repeat itself.

I was prepared to come to the floor today and offer an amendment barring DOL from using appropriated funds to impose fines under the limited circumstances we have been discussing, until DOL has completed rulemaking to revise HO 12.

However, the language in the committee's report is a step in the right direction. Both the House and Senate committee reports on this bill include time-certain expectations for action by DOL in addressing this issue and appear to promise aggressive followup. This seems reasonable and fair, and I look forward to working with the chairman as this matter progresses.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, very briefly on another matter in a colloquy moment or two ago by the majority leader and the Republican leader about health care, there was a mention that the Senator from Texas had used the term "Gestapo tactics." He did not. And he spoke to that issue.

In a press interview yesterday afternoon, I questioned with great concern a terminology and a proposal inside the Clinton-Mitchell health care bill that spoke to fraud squads. I said if these were not properly regulated clearly Gestapo-like tactics that had been used by other Federal agencies over time to break into private property and to demand the opening of books for certain purposes that once appeared to be legitimate could occur.

I did use that term and I meant it out of real concerns as we discuss these tactics and these bills and these very critical pieces of legislation that we are extremely cautious we do not give Federal agencies priority and responsibility in enforcement well beyond what they should have. That is where that term may have appeared in certain press releases.

I thank the chairman for yielding.

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARKIN. I yield.

Mr. DOLE. I wonder if following the unanimous-consent request the Senator from Washington may be recognized on another matter for 5 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. It is my intention after asking unanimous consent for this to ask that the Senate proceed in this morning business.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I had intended to make a brief comment about the health care issue. I understand my colleague from Washington has a plane to catch. I will defer to him. In fact, if he has a plane to catch let him speak now.

Mr. HARKIN. Let me complete this. It will not take 3 minutes.

Mr. GORTON. I am happy to wait.

Mr. DOLE. Could I say further I wanted to add Senator HATCH as a cosponsor of the Dole-Lieberman amendment? I say to colleagues we were prepared to vote today. We were informed there would be no more votes after 4 o'clock. We are prepared to take this up. If the DOD bill is coming up it may be offered on that bill rather than Labor-HHS.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following amendments be the only floor amendments remaining in order to H.R. 4606, the Labor, HHS appropriations bill; that they may be offered in the first or second degree, if offered to an excepted committee amendment; that other second-degree amendments be in order provided they are relevant to the first degree to which offered; provided further that upon disposition of the amendments, any remaining excepted committee amendments be agreed to, the bill be read a third time and the Senate then vote on passage of the bill; that upon disposition of H.R. 4606, the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees, with the above occurring without intervening action or debate; that all floor amendments must be offered by 12 noon on Monday, August 8; that 10 minutes prior to that time Senator SPECTER be recognized to offer amendments to Republican Senators who are on the list and have not had a chance to offer; and that 5 minutes prior to that time Senator HARKIN be recognized to offer amendments of Democratic Senators who have not had a chance to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the list be amended by adding an amendment by Senator BOND.

Mr. HARKIN. No objection.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I had started to engage the majority leader in a discussion when he said he had to check the list and would be back. The unanimous-consent request is being propounded by the chairman. So I will not make my comments now in light of the fact that the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Texas are to catch planes, but I will seek recognition at the conclusion of their statements to make the comments that I had intended to make in the presence of the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

FISCAL YEAR 1994 LABOR/HHS/EDUCATION BILL

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I join the chairman and ranking member of the subcommittee in supporting H.R. 4606, the Labor, HHS, and Education appropriations bill for fiscal year 1995 that is before the Senate today. I want to take this opportunity to thank Senators HARKIN and SPECTER, as well as the other members of the subcommittee, for once again bringing before the Senate such a well-balanced bill under very tight budget constraints.

H.R. 4606 contains $252.8 billion, including $69.9 billion for discretionary programs, and encompasses a wide range of services which will benefit the people of this Nation through improving job opportunities, enhancing educational excellence, advancing medical research, and expanding health services. It is no easy task to reconcile the competing human service needs facing the chairman and ranking member, but they have done an admirable job. Let me take this opportunity to highlight some of the critical program recommendations of the bill.

DISLOCATED WORKERS

Dislocated workers in Oregon and the Pacific Northwest will benefit from a needed increase in Federal assistance for job retraining. The bill recommends $1.3 billion for title III of the Job Training Partnership Act to assist States and localities in providing retraining assistance to dislocated workers. This is an increase of nearly $178 million over last year. These funds are essential for the Pacific Northwest, which has so many communities facing an uncertain economic future due to changes in Federal environmental policies.

On May 31, 1994, I chaired a special hearing of the Appropriations Committee in Portland, OR. The hearing examined issues surrounding the dislocated worker retraining programs and the administration's proposed Reemployment Act. Every witness reiterated the message that greater flexibility in the Economic Dislocation and Worker Adjustment Act [EDWAA] is needed in order for States and communities to deliver efficient and effective readjustment services under the act. Greater flexibility in the provision of needs-based payments was particularly emphasized.

Clearly, issues of flexibility will be addressed during consideration of the proposed Reemployment Act later this year, or during the next session of Congress. However, as an interim step, the committee included language in the bill at my request which amends provisions in EDWAA to make it easier for States to provide needs-based payments to workers involved in long-term training programs. These changes are effective during fiscal year 1995 only. Coupled with the funding increase, the language in the bill will help promote the expansion of services for dislocated timber workers throughout the Northwest.

BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH

The bill before us today contains $11.3 billion to support the National Institutes of Health. The funds will support research into the causes, treatment, and cures of the vast array of diseases and illnesses, many of which are only beginning to be understood. These funds are the best medicine for fighting the fiscal and medical diseases which plague our health care system.

H.R. 4606 includes increases of at least 3 percent for all the NIH institutes and centers to enable medical research in all the disease areas to move forward. As the Congress moves toward enactment of comprehensive health care reform legislation, I believe it is essential that an aggressive medical research program be maintained as a central mechanism for controlling the costs of health care. A cure is the ultimate in cost control, and the NIH is the Federal entity which supports research.

ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE

For several years now, I have urged the Senate to embark on a national program to rid this country of the scourge of Alzheimer's disease, a disease that affects 4 million Americans and costs $90 billion annually. I have set an annual goal of $500 million, the amount scientists say is needed for a full scale attack on this dread disease. Funding for research on Alzheimer's disease has nearly doubled since 1990, rising from $146.1 million in 1990 to $302 million in 1994. I am pleased to report that this investment is beginning to pay off. Earlier this year, startling developments were announced regarding a potential genetic link to Alzheimer's disease. If confirmed in subsequent studies, this opens up enormous opportunities for advancing understanding and treatment of this disease.

RARE DISEASE RESEARCH

Mr. President, cancer, diabetes, AIDS, and heart disease are well known to most Americans as threats to a healthy society. But what about terms such as Marfan's syndrome, epidermolysis bullosa, Fanconi anemia, and ectrodactly-ectodermal dysplasia-clefting syndrome [EEC]. These are rare diseases, unknown to the vast majority of us, unless we suffer from them or know someone who suffers from them. A rare, or orphan, disease affects fewer than 200,000 Americans. Rare diseases are equally as devastating as the more common disorders. But there is a greater lack of hope for those who suffer from the 5,000 different rare diseases because little or no research is being undertaken into their causes, treatments, and cures.

With the establishment of the Office of Rare Disease Research at the NIH, a small step has been taken to begin to develop a strategy and coordinated research effort to tackle the enormous task of rare disease research. H.R. 4606 builds upon this step by appropriating $1 million over the level requested in the budget for the NIH Office. These funds will enable the Office to move ahead with implementation of the clinical data base, to support scientific workshops and symposia to stimulate rare disease research, and to support the planning and operational activities of the Office. I believe much more needs to be done, and therefore I have introduced legislation, S. 1203, to establish a Center for Rare Disease Research at the National Institutes of Health. But, the additional funding in this bill will help further the goal of expanding and better coordinating research on rare disorders until my legislation can be enacted.

RURAL HEALTH

Rural health care systems face a number of unique barriers in their struggle to provide quality health care to their communities. Geographic isolation, a shortage of care providers, and an unusually large number of elderly and uninsured patients, are particular problems of rural communities.

On two occasions over the past 18 months I have examined the problems of rural health care when I chaired special hearings of the Appropriations Committee in Oregon on rural health care. The hearings examined the existing Federal public health programs serving rural residents and explored how our national investment in health care reform might most effectively meet the needs of rural America. Nearly all of the testimony received stressed the importance to rural communities of Community and Migrant Health Centers, Rural Health Outreach Grants, the National Health Service Corps, and Area Health Education Centers Program. The bill before the Senate today recognizes the importance of these programs and recommends $207 million for fiscal year 1995.

AIDS

Mr. President, few could argue with the fact that AIDS, a disease that was virtually unheard of a dozen years ago, continues to plague our society. The bill includes $2.58 billion to continue the strong commitment to research, prevention, and treatment programs to fight this dread disease. Included is an increase of $54.3 million for the AIDS services programs authorized by the Ryan White CARE Act, including a $31 million increase for title I. These funds are particularly important to Oregon, since it is expected that Portland will become eligible in fiscal year 1995 for funding under title I of the act.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN

One of the most important aspects of the bill before the Senate is the extent to which it enhances our investment in programs serving women, children, and families. Included in the bill is $3.5 billion, an increase of $220 million for Head Start. This is another step towards expanding the program in order to provide Head Start to all eligible children.

To build upon recent improvements in our Nation's immunization record, the bill includes $888.4 million for the National Immunization Program of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. These funds will be used, not only to purchase the necessary vaccines, but to improve local vaccine delivery infrastructures and to implement essential immunization outreach and tracking programs in communities throughout the country.

Also, the bill continues to build upon the committee's commitment to augment funding for domestic violence programs. Just 3 years ago, funding for the Family Violence Program totaled $10.7 million. H.R. 4606 includes $32.6 million for the Family Violence Program, an increase of $5 million over fiscal year 1994. In addition, additional funding is provided to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to continue the development of a national program to prevent violence against women and children.

These are just a few examples of the programs in the bill which serve women and children. Other programs, such as, the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant, the Child Care Block Grant, and Women's Health Study at the NIH, continue under the committee's recommendation.

HUMAN SERVICES

The bill also includes additional funds for services to some of the most vulnerable members of our society. A total of $393.5 million is recommended for the Community Services Block Grant Program, an increase of $8 million over last year. These funds will assist over 900 community action agencies in providing a wide array of services to foster low-income individuals in becoming self-sufficient, and to alleviate the very causes of their poverty in their communities.

Funding is also maintained for the domestic refugee resettlement programs of the Department. These programs provide critical resources to States, voluntary agencies, and mutual assistance associations to help refugees become self-supporting productive members of society. Refugees face substantial language and cultural barriers when they resettle in this country. The delivery of subsistence, medical, and employment services within the first 12 months of arrival is essential for effective resettlement.

EDUCATION

Mr. President, our hopes for maintaining a leadership role in the global market and our requirements for economic growth hinge upon our education system. It is not enough to simply provide tax incentives for investments in plants and equipment. We must also be willing to invest in human minds as well. We must continue to provide our children with the educational opportunities and technologies to help them meet world class standards. H.R. 4606 includes a total of $27.1 million to help States, local education agencies, colleges, universities, and other education entities in educating our Nation's students. This is $878 million above the amount provided in fiscal year 1994.

URBAN GRANTS

Mr. President, many of the urban universities across the Nation contribute to the needs of the cities in which they are located. To help these universities in this effort, this bill contains $13 million, an increase of $2.3 million over the fiscal year 1994 level, for the Department of Education's Urban Grants Program. This program supports grants to urban universities to encourage community involvement in solving education, health, crime and economic development problems of their particular urban area.

In closing, Mr. President, I again want to thank the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the subcommittee, Mr. HARKIN and Mr. SPECTER, for their cooperation and support.

THE FISCAL YEAR 1995 LABOR, HEALTH, AND EDUCATION APPROPRIATIONS BILL, H.R. 4606

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the Senate Budget Committee has examined H.R. 4606, the fiscal year 1994 Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies appropriations bill and has found it to be under its 602(b) budget authority allocation by $2 million and that it meets its outlay allocation exactly.

Mr. President, I have a table prepared by the Budget Committee which shows the official scoring of H.R. 4606, the Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and related agencies appropriations bill and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD at the appropriate point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I would like to commend the distinguished Chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. HARKIN, and the distinguished ranking member of the subcommittee, Mr. SPECTER, for their leadership in producing the Labor-Health and Human Services-Education and related agencies appropriations bill for fiscal year 1995. It reflects a fair and balanced allocation of funds made through difficult decisions among many meritorious programs.

As a member of this subcommittee, I am well aware of the difficulties in choosing among the programs that fall under its jurisdiction. Programs administered by the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services and Education do much to strengthen the economic competitiveness of our Nation and contribute to the enrichment of our society.

I am pleased to note that this bill increases funding for Department of Education programs to $27.4 billion, a 3.5 percent increase over last year. Significant increases are provided for those educational programs with the greatest impact on children and adults who need extra assistance in order to help them reach their full potential, teacher training programs designed to enhance teacher ability to offer the best instruction, and innovative technology programs to improve student learning opportunities.

In particular, the Committee has included $50 million for Educational Technology, the new technology program authorized as part A of title III of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994, S. 1513.

This new program includes most of the provisions of the Technology for Education Act, S. 1040. I was pleased to join as an original sponsor of this legislation with Senators BINGAMAN and KENNEDY earlier this year. This educational technology program is intended to promote equal access for all elementary and secondary students to the educational opportunities made available through advances in technology.

At least 50 percent of the educational technology funds provided are to be used to assist State and local programs in purchasing technology resources for those schools showing the greatest need, obtaining technical assistance, and supporting professional development. The remaining funds will strengthen the Federal leadership role in promoting the integration of technology into the kindergarten through 12th grade classrooms and coordinating educational technology with the emerging national information infrastructure.

The committee has also provided $3.2 million for a program that has greatly enriched learning opportunities for our Nation's students. The national writing project provides teachers of every discipline, from kindergarten through college, with an opportunity to participate in summer and in-school writing clinics to help improve the teaching of writing in our Nation's schools and to emphasize the importance of writing in a student's ability to think and learn. In 45 States, Federal funds are used to support the national writing project's 160 sites which are affiliated with institutions of higher education.

For every Federal dollar invested in the writing project, five additional dollars are leveraged from State, university, school district, and other sources. Last year, 105,029 teachers participated in the program at a cost to the Federal government of $18.34 per teacher. Over 7 million students of all ethnic and linguistic backgrounds were challenged to write more effectively through their classroom teachers' expanded teaching and writing skills. In a single year, 18 percent of the Nation's K–12 public school students benefited from this Federal investment, which amounts to 34 cents per student.

Other educational priorities of this bill include:

The Chapter 1 Program funded at $7.2 billion, over $300 million more than last year.

The sum of $10 million for the Ready to Learn Television as Teacher Act to support the development of quality preschool education television programs and written materials for use by parents and day care providers.

The sum of $33 million for the Star Schools program to give more students in rural areas the opportunity to participate in courses that would be not be available without distance learning technology—a $7 million increase over last year's level. Through 6 years of increased funding for Star Schools, children in some of the most remote and disadvantaged schools in Mississippi, and all over the country, have had an opportunity to study such subjects as Japanese and advanced physics taught by some the Nation's best teachers.

The sum of $3 million for the telecommunications demonstration project, "Mathline," authorized in title II, part E of the Improving America's School Act to improve the teaching of mathematics by making available teacher training in the use of a new curriculum-based telecommunications infrastructure.

Other education programs that are particularly important to my State include Library Literacy programs; the Even Start, Family Literacy Program; Foreign Language Assistance; Tech Prep Education and College Campus-Based Student Financial Aid programs.

In the area of Health and Human Services, the Committee has provided additional funding for the State Offices of Health to continue its outreach efforts to health providers living in rural areas. The State Offices of Rural Health's activities include: examining rural health care delivery and recommending improvement in quality and cost effectiveness; assisting in the recruitment and retention of health professionals; providing technical assistance to attract more Federal, State, and foundation funding for rural health; and coordinating rural health interests across the State. These offices serve a vital role in recruiting health-care professionals and coordinating the delivery of health services in rural communities, and I am pleased that our committee provided $5 million for the State Offices of Rural Health program in fiscal year 1995.

I also appreciate the efforts of the committee in directing the National Center for Research Resources to increase its funding for the IDEA Program over the 1994 level.

I am encouraged by increases in funding for cardiovascular diseases, including stroke, and diabetes.

I am pleased the committee has been able to propose funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting of $330 million. This will enable Federal support to continue at current services levels to America's public television stations and radio stations. Federal contributions account for only 14 percent of the funding for public television and they continue to do a good job at raising private and corporate support. I am supportive of the increased educational focus the Corporation for Public Broadcasting has demonstrated recently in the programming it supports, particularly in the area of preschool education.

This bill represents a commitment to education and the future of our Nation's young people. It has been carefully and thoughtfully written to make the best use of Federal resources in a time of tight budgetary constraints. Many important and worthy education and health programs are expanded by this legislation and others that have outlived their usefulness have been eliminated.

I urge other Senators to join me in support of this legislation.

FISCAL YEAR LABOR/HHS/EDUCATION APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I join the distinguished Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the subcommittee, in supporting the Labor-HHS and Education bill that is before the Senate today. Due to the budget constraints that the subcommittee faced, it was not possible to provide all of the increases that we would have liked, but the recommendations will go a long way in addressing the health, education, and employment needs of this country. I want to take this opportunity to thank the distinguished Senator from Iowa and commend him for his hard work and his willingness to accommodate the many requests received from Democratic and Republican Senators.

The funding in this bill addresses a wide array of programs—from the educational needs of children from preschool through college to training and retraining this Nation's work force, immunizing our children, confronting the problem of teen pregnancy, AIDS, and the causes and cures of disease. Collectively, the programs in this bill will address many of the present needs of this Nation's people and an investment in our future.

The bill before us today is the largest appropriation bill to come before the Senate with a total of more than $252.9 billion, including $69.9 billion in discretionary spending.

I would like to highlight some of the areas that are of particular importance to me.

LIHEAP

The Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program is of vital importance to the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Funding for this program supports grants to States to deliver critical assistance to low-income households to help meet the high cost of heating and cooling their homes. This bill maintains $1.385 billion for the 1994–95 winter. In addition, the bill contains $1.475 billion in advance funding for the 1995–96 winter program. Finally, $600 million is provided for the emergency contingency fund to be released in the event the President submits a budget request declaring all, or a portion of these funds as an emergency.

The recommendations in the bill maintain the Committee's commitment to the LIHEAP program. Under the level proposed in the President's budget, as many as 250,000 households would have lost assistance. Most of the residents of these households are elderly, disabled and/or poor. For example, 82 percent of LIHEAP households in Pennsylvania have incomes less than $10,000 annually and 34 percent have elderly residents. In Philadelphia alone, 71,000 families have incomes of $5,000 a year or less and spend 40 percent of their incomes on energy costs.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

I recently visited shelters for battered women in Harrisburg and Pittsburgh. One woman told me that she had just 9 days to find affordable housing for her and her 2-year-old son, or she would have had to return to her abusive spouse. The O.J. Simpson case has brought the incidence of domestic violence into the public eye. But unfortunately, family violence is not a rare occurrence. Last year alone, an estimated 4 million women were beaten by their husbands or partners. Battering is the single largest cause of injury to women in the United States, and medical costs associated with those injuries are estimated to be $3.5 billion annually. To prevent the incidence of family violence and provide immediate shelter to victims and their families, the bill includes $32.6 million, an increase of $5.2 million over the fiscal year 1994 amount. To complement the recently launched public education campaign, $1 million has been included to expand community education and outreach activities by providing education and training sessions for community leaders and law enforcement personnel. The bill also provides $750,000 for a national conference on violence, including domestic violence, to explore promising and proven effective prevention interventions.

TEENAGE PREGNANCY

When one talks of the social ills in America today, the high number of births to teens is always at the top of the list. Each year in this country, over one million teenagers become pregnant, and more than 80 percent of these pregnancies are unintended. The costs associated with teen births is staggering. Estimates of the cost of AFDC, Medicaid, and Food Stamps to support families begun by teens, totals over $25 billion annually. Because teen moms are less likely to eat nutritiously or to get prenatal care, and are more likely to smoke and drink than other mothers, they are also more likely to give birth to low-birthweight children. It is a human tragedy for a child to be born weighing 16 ounces with attendant problems which last a lifetime. I first saw a 1-pound baby in 1984, and I was astounded to learn that Pittsburgh, PA, at that time, had the highest infant mortality rate of African-American babies of any city in the United States. It was an amazing thing for me to see a 1-pound baby—about as big as my hand.

Beyond the human tragedy of low-birthweight there are financial consequences. In 1990, the hospital-related costs for caring for low-birthweight newborns totaled more than $2 billion, or an average of $21,000 per infant. And in infants of extremely low-birth weight, hospital costs often exceed $150,000.

To begin to address the issues of teen pregnancy prevention and the consequences of low-birthweight children, the bill includes $221.5 million for programs involved in pregnancy prevention, an increase of $23 million over the 1994 appropriation. These funds will support teen pregnancy prevention education, counseling, and services for young men and women. Included is $13.4 million for comprehensive school health education programs to arm students with the knowledge and skills to make informed decisions about health habits and behaviors. Also included is $6 million for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention for a new teen pregnancy prevention demonstration program. The program will provide grants to localities for the development of community partnership coalitions for the prevention of teen pregnancies.

BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH

The bill before us contains $11.3 billion for the National Institutes of Health, an increase of $395.7 million above the fiscal year 1994 appropriation. The funds recommended will continue the tremendous progress made in the development of treatments and cures for diseases that afflict so many Americans. The increase provided will enable scientists to pursue the most promising avenues of research into diseases such as diabetes, heart and circulatory disorders, Alzheimer's, cancer, Parkinson's, and other neurological illnesses. Funds will also continue the great advances made toward the completion of a detailed map of the human genome. In addition, funds will support promising work in the field of gene therapy.

On May 9, 1994, I visited with researchers involved in gene therapy at the University of Pennsylvania. They reported to me on the substantial advances in the development of gene therapies for reducing cholesterol levels in persons with hypercholesterolemia, and for providing relief to persons suffering with cystic fibrosis. Bringing these breakthroughs to clinical application will yield wondrous results which will alleviate human suffering, prolong life, and produce savings in the medical costs required by these chronic diseases.

BREAST CANCER

Breast Cancer—words that every woman hopes that she will never hear from her physician. It is estimated that during the decade of the 1990's, more than 2 million women will have been diagnosed with the disease and that 460,000 women will have died of it. Although women diagnosed in the early stages of the disease have a 5-year survival rate of 93 percent, women who have been treated for breast cancer can never be assured that it will not recur. Scientific advances have raised hopes of prevention, but to date no proven methods have been found. Since 1989, when I became the ranking member of this subcommittee, breast cancer research has risen from $80.4 million to an estimated $350 million included in this bill for fiscal year 1995.

The number of women who have ever had a mammogram increased to 74 percent in 1992, from 64 percent in 1990. However, the increase is not spread evenly across all groups of women. The major increase occurred among white women with incomes of over $25,000 per year. Efforts of the American Cancer Society, women's health groups, and even equipment manufacturers, to educate consumers, and of professional groups to educate physicians, are probably responsible for much of the screening increase. The bill also provides $100 million, an increase of $21.9 million over the previous year's funding, for breast and cervical cancer screening. The increase provided will expand the number of States with comprehensive programs to educate and screen women at risk for developing breast and cervical cancer. A combination of annual clinical breast examinations and mammography can reduce breast cancer mortality by more than 30 percent for women ages 50 to 74.

ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE

This bill also addresses one of the most devasting health problems confronting this country—Alzheimer's disease. We have invested approximately $311 million to support the most promising avenues of research on a disease that has already stricken over 4 million Americans, and threatens millions more in the years ahead.

AIDS

This bill contains $2.589 billion for research, education, prevention, and services to battle AIDS. This amount represents an increase of $107.7 million over the amount appropriated last year. Included in this amount is $356.5 million to provide grants to metropolitan areas hardest hit by this disease. A total of 34 cities were served with last year's funds and with the additional funds provided in fiscal year 1995, 3 to 7 new cities will be served.

For pediatric AIDS demonstration grants to support collaboration between institutions and community based providers of underserved children, youth, pregnant women, and their families, the bill provides $26 million, an increase of $4 million over the level provided in fiscal year 1994. Because of their unique vulnerability, infants suffering from AIDS require specially tailored approaches for treatment, prevention, and care. The funds provided will continue the existing pediatric and adolescent AIDS demonstration projects.

MENTAL HEALTH

Each year, more than 40 million adults in the United States, experience one or more mental disorders. In addition 8 million children are tormented with serious emotional disturbances. The direct and indirect costs of these illnesses have been estimated to cost over $148 billion each year. The bill contains $412.6 million to prevent and treat mental illness and minimize the disabilities associated with these illnesses. In addition, the bill provides $633.8 million for the National Institute of Mental Health to support research on the prevention and treatment of mental illness.

SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT

Substance abuse continues to be a national public health problem contributing to the incidence of violence, auto collisions and accidents on the job. Drug abuse also greatly increases the number of low-birth weight infants, the incidence of HIV-AIDS, and mortality rates. The societal costs associated with substance abuse is substantial, contributing to increased crime, health care costs, interdiction, and lost productivity of the Nation's work force. For prevention and treatment programs the bill includes $1.7 billion, an increase of $44 million over the fiscal year 1994 appropriation.

EDUCATION

To strengthen our educational system and expand higher education opportunities for young adults, the bill provides $27.4 billion.

Funding for programs to improve education for disadvantaged children is increased $321.7 million over the previous year's level, to a total of $7.2 billion. Included in this amount is $102.1 million for even start, a program which combines early childhood education, adult literacy, and parenting skills. Also included is $41 million for disadvantaged children attending private schools.

The bill provides $6 million in first-time funding for the charter school program. These public schools, formed by teachers, parents, and other members of the community, are exempt from many of the Federal, State, and local regulatory requirements. In exchange for enhanced flexibility charter schools will be required to develop specific plans to enable students to meet challenging State performance standards. Private management companies are operating in some States where charter school legislation has been enacted, giving these companies and local education agencies the opportunity to try new and innovative approaches to education reform.

To increase the education opportunities for college bound youth, the bill recommends $7.6 billion for student financial aid, including $6.2 billion for the Pell Grant Program. The maximum Pell grant is also increased $40 over the fiscal year 1994 amount to $2,340. The bill also restores the $210 million in cuts proposed by the President for campus-based aid programs.

There are approximately one million men and women incarcerated in prisons, jails, and juvenile facilities in this Nation. Seventy-five percent of those incarcerated do not have a high school diploma and most have few marketable skills or work history. It is my belief that criminal offenders, especially juvenile and first and second offenders, should be given the chance at rehabilitation and gainful employment. That chance can only come through education. To address the educational needs of prisoners, the bill includes $118.6 million. Within that amount $40 million is included for the neglected and delinquent program which provides educational opportunities for youth in juvenile and adult corrections facilities, $5.1 million to improve the literacy skills of prisoners, $38.7 million for substance abuse prevention and treatment for criminal justice populations, and $34.8 million from funds set aside within the adult and vocational education programs.

The bill also restores $44.5 million in funding for library programs that the administration proposed to decrease or eliminate. This brings the total amount available for library programs to $147.5 million, an increase of $1.2 million above the amount appropriated in fiscal year 1994.

In closing, Mr. President, I again want to thank Senator HARKIN and his staff and the other members of the subcommittee for their cooperation in a very tough budget year.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I want to commend the Senate Appropriations Committee for its efforts in this legislation to increase flexibility in existing worker retraining programs.

Changes in our economy result in dislocation and employment shifts, so workers often must retrain to keep pace. I am a cosponsor of the pending Reemployment Act, which is a comprehensive initiative to restructure our Federal retraining programs. But in the interim, I strongly support efforts to make the existing programs more flexible and responsive to the real needs of dislocated workers and their families.

This bill includes a small, but crucial provision to ensure that workers have at least 6 weeks after receiving a discretionary grant for training. This is a vital change because dislocated workers often cannot afford to enroll in retraining programs until they are confident that they will have Federal assistance and needs-related payments to help them pay rent and buy groceries while in retraining courses.

Current law for most retraining programs requires workers to enroll in training by their 13th week of unemployment benefits, regardless of when the dislocated workers secure federal retraining help or the timing of academic courses. Because of delays in approving grants, workers are sometimes notified of Federal assistance just days before the enrollment cutoff of the 13 weeks takes effect. In such cases, people may be shutout of the courses they want or not have time to find the right course to start them on a new career path. It is tragic when paperwork and regulations obstruct the true goals of our programs.

Modest changes proposed in the appropriations bill will ensure that workers have 6 weeks to enroll in courses once they know they qualify for Federal retraining assistance and can afford to go back to school. I offered a similar 6-week extension to the Federal training program established for workers dislocated by NAFTA, which was adopted by voice vote in the Senate Finance Committee and incorporated in the final legislation.

I am interested and involved in the technical details of worker retraining because of concerns raised by West Virginians who in these programs and struggling to cut through the paperwork and get the retraining they need to go back to work. People in my State want help getting a job, so I believe my job is to cut through Federal paperwork and regulatory rules that hinder effective use of Federal retraining programs. Provisions in this legislation are important clarifications to make our discretionary worker retraining grants more flexible and user friendly. This will really make a difference to dislocated workers and their families in West Virginia and across the country.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would first like to thank the subcommittee members for their work in identifying the priority funding needs under exceptionally tight budgetary conditions. It was impossible to accommodate all of the investment items sought by the President while still retaining many high priority items but the subcommittee has done extremely well in balancing competing priorities.

I would specifically like to thank the subcommittee chairman, Senator HARKIN, and ranking member, Senator SPECTER for their continued strong leadership on this important bill.

The Senate-reported Labor-HHS-Education bill provides $213.4 billion in budget authority and $176.5 billion in new outlays for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and related agencies for fiscal year 1994. Of this amount, $68.2 billion in budget authority and $28.1 billion in new outlays is for discretionary spending. When adjustments are made for advance appropriations, prior year outlays, mandatories, and emergency contingency appropriations, the Senate-reported bill provides $266.1 billion in budget authority and $265.7 billion in outlays for fiscal year 1995.

The Senate-reported bill is below the subcommittee's section 602(b) allocation in budget authority by $1.6 million and at the subcommittee's section 602(b) allocation in outlays.

This bill has strong bipartisan support. It was reported from committee without dissent. I appreciate the subcommittee's responsiveness to Members' concerns and suggestions for funding priorities.

In particular, I appreciate the subcommittee's support of my request for funding Hispanic serving institutions. This program which provides special assistance to higher education institutions attempting to meet the needs of the Hispanic community. This is the first year this program has received funding and I thank the chairman for his support.

New Mexico has 13 schools that are classified as Hispanic serving institutions. Funds under this program could help these schools strengthen their educational programs, assist them in improving facilities and purchase educational materials.

I'd also like to thank the chairman for providing an almost $18 million increase for the work of NIMH. Included in the report is language that will direct additional funds above the House level to priority research under the "Decade of the Brain" initiative.

As a result of the efforts of this subcommittee, medical researchers, during this "Decade of the Brain" will make significant progress in understanding the brain, identifying the causes of serious mental illness, and developing effective treatments for these devastating illnesses.

This research is bearing fruit in our discussion of health care reform. There is a now a recognition that health care coverage for severe mental illness must be provided on an equitable basis with other physical illnesses.

Continuation of initiatives to assist the homeless are also critical, many of whom are victims of mental illness. I am pleased that the bill before us appropriates $29.5 million for PATH grants [Program to Aid the Transition from Homelessness], and $65.4 million for Health Care for the Homeless, an increase of $2.4 million above the 1994 level.

I would again like to thank the subcommittee chairman and ranking member, as well as the other members of this subcommittee, for addressing these important issues. I urge the adoption of the bill.

VACCINES FOR CHILDREN (VFC) PROGRAM

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, as the Senate acts on the Labor-HHS-Education appropriations measure today, I want to call attention to a provision relating to the new Vaccines For Children [VFC] Program. As we all know, this program was enacted last year to make childhood immunizations available to Medicaid and uninsured children in private physicians' offices. The vaccines would be purchased by the Federal Government at the discounted price made available to the Centers for Disease Control [CDC]. By law, this program is to begin this October 1—only 2 months from now.

The administration has determined that it will use a new distribution system to get the free childhood vaccines to physicians' offices. This system will rely on the General Services Administration [GSA], its distribution facility and its contract with Federal Express. CDC has been working with GSA to get this new distribution system operational in time for the program to begin October 1, a highly ambitious undertaking. Real concerns have been raised that despite the administration's hard work and good intentions, the distribution system may not be ready on time. A recent report by the General Accounting Office confirms that significant obstacles may yet to be overcome in order for the VFC Program to be successful and timely.

Citing this GAO report, our colleagues on the Appropriations Committee have included language insisting that the administration certify the new distribution system is in good working order before any vaccines are shipped through it. I commend this well placed concern and the oversight of the committee. However, I am concerned that some aspects of the committee amendment may create new, additional obstacles to implementing the VFC program on time.

Specifically, the amendment requires the Secretary to certify not only that the new distribution is safe and effective, but that it is the absolute lowest cost option for distributing vaccines to children. The amendment further requires that this lowest-cost certification include evidence of bids solicited through a private sector competition. Unfortunately, the Federal Government's process of soliciting competitive bids, itself, takes months. This requirement, posed in this fashion, effectively guarantees that the VFC Program cannot open its doors to Medicaid and uninsured children on October 1. This raises grave concerns about how children will receive the immunizations to which they are entitled. We must not lose sight of this important priority.

Mr. President, once again, I appreciate the committee's efforts to safeguard a high quality, effective and efficient vaccine distribution system for the VFC Program. I strongly urge that we all take a much closer look at the most reasonable way to achieve this goal while doing everything possible to also ensure that the VFC Program is able to serve the Nation's children at the earliest possible date.

VACCINES FOR CHILDREN

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, timely implementation of the Vaccines for Children [VFC] Program is essential. The program is a vital component of the President's childhood immunization initiative to eliminate all barriers to the appropriate immunization of children.

When Congress passed this program last year, we recognized that cost is a major barrier to the timely and appropriate immunization of our Nation's preschool children. I am delighted to see recent data show an improvement in the national immunization rate to 72 percent. However, we are still far from reaching our goal of immunizing 90 percent of our preschoolers on time. And, cost remains one of the major barriers to this goal.

In my home State of Washington, the universal system has been integral to the State's successful immunization strategy. Not only has this system made vaccines freely available to all children in their doctors' offices, but it also has enhanced the State's ability to develop a comprehensive immunization delivery system. Among other things, we will be able to develop more easily a statewide immunization registry to obtain up-to-date information about how well our children are protected from vaccine-preventable diseases.

States without universal purchase systems miss an opportunity to immunize children. In these States, families are referred to free public immunization clinics when they cannot afford the vaccines. This does not happen in Washington State. Consequently, the burden of public clinics in my home State is eased. They are able to serve more efficiently those children for whom the clinic is the usual source of health care. By providing physicians with federally purchased vaccines, the Vaccines for Children Program will allow States that do not have universal systems to similarly reduce the number of missed immunization opportunities and referrals of children to public clinics.

The interim report of the Government Accounting Office [GAO] regarding the VFC Program raised a number of valid concerns about the proposed Federal vaccine distribution center. However, it is my understanding that the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services [HHS] and the General Services Administration [GSA] are working with the Food and Drug Administration [FDA] to address these concerns and comply with relevant regulations to ensure vaccine safety. I also understand this can be done without delaying the start of this very important program. It is extremely important that obstacles not be placed in the way of the timely implementation of the Vaccines for Children Program.

VACCINES FOR CHILDREN

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I would like to briefly summarize the history of an important program designed to increase the immunization rates of our Nation's most vulnerable children.

Last year, after vigorous debate, the Congress enacted the Vaccines for Children [VFC] Program as part of President Clinton's childhood immunization initiative. Congress created the new program to remove existing barriers which prevent our most vulnerable populations, children up to 2 years of age, from receiving age-appropriate immunizations.

Barriers, while not always obvious, build on each other. Although 70 percent of uninsured children have private pediatricians, many of them are referred to public clinics due to costs. Public clinics, however, are overburdened, plagued by long lines and demands for acute care. National rates of immunization reflect these problems.

While our national goal is to reach a 90-percent immunization rate for the basic series of vaccines, 1993 national rates show coverage of only 72 percent by age 3. Although the rate increased dramatically from 55 percent in 1992, it was largely due to increased awareness from the measles resurgence between 1989 and 1991.

In an effort to increase immunization rates to 90 percent and provide children with affordable vaccines, the childhood immunization initiative created a new program—Vaccines for Children [VFC]. Under the Federal program, States can elect to receive pediatric vaccines purchased by the Centers for Disease Control [CDC] for federally eligible children. Currently eligible children include: Medicaid enrollees, the uninsured, American Indian or Alaska Natives, and the underinsured who receive immunizations at public health clinics. Program-registered public and private providers will receive pediatric vaccines from States at no charge.

CDC and the States will administer the VFC program, which will purchase and distribute vaccines to enrolled providers. The administration is currently planning to use the General Services Administration [GSA] to store and distribute vaccines while the CDC will negotiate prices with the manufacturers.

Unfortunately, the VFC program and its implementation is greatly misunderstood. Its opponents suggest that immunization rates have reached 90 percent, despite data which shows national immunization rates almost 20 percent lower. Relatively high immunization rates for specific antigens does not mean that children have received the appropriate combination of recommended vaccines. Also, immunization coverage in the United States is not spread evenly, resulting in large pockets of undervaccinated children and leaving over 25 percent of our children with inadequate protection.

Mr. President, a recent General Accounting Office [GAO] report regarding VFC implementation has added to program misconceptions. Although GAO identified certain areas which merit additional attention, including better preparation of the GSA warehouse for vaccine storage, they concluded that the Department of Health and Human Services [DHHS] will be able to safely and effectively implement the VFC program by the October deadline. At that time, participating providers will receive appropriate levels of vaccines, the distribution system will be functional, and many public and private providers will be enrolled. I would also like to note that the GAO evaluated the program's implementation despite the fact that the program has not yet been implemented.

Following the publication of the GAO report, the Senate Appropriations Committee accepted by voice vote an amendment regarding program implementation. The amendment would prohibit distribution of publicly purchased vaccine by the GSA until the Appropriations Committee certifies that the distribution system is adequately tested and licensed and the system is lower than the cost of private bids. Additional report language directs the DHHS to solicit private sector bids for storage and vaccine distribution.

Although I agree with several of the amendment's components, especially perfecting the distribution system, I have serious concerns with the overall restrictive nature of the amendment and specifically with its requirements regarding costs. In addition, I understand the amendment could raise constitutional problems and jurisdictional points of order. At this time, however, I will not subject the bill to a point of order. Instead, I have laid out my concerns and sincerely hope they are resolved throughout the remainder of the legislative process.

I thank the distinguished Chair and appreciate the opportunity to discuss this important program before the Senate.

AMENDMENT NO. 2460

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I plan to oppose the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTOR], to restrict the President's authority to commit American troops abroad.

Under the proposed amendment, the President could send United States Armed Forces to Haiti only under the following limited circumstances: First, with prior congressional approval; second, if necessary to protect the lives of American citizens; or third, if it is in our national security interests and there is no time to seek congressional authorization.

Now, I personally disapprove of the President's handling of the situation in Haiti. In my view, we have no national security interest at stake there. The embargo has been a disaster. And it would be a grave mistake for the United States military to invade that nation.

But the question posed by the Specter amendment goes beyond the narrow issue of just sending troops to Haiti. Instead, the amendment seeks to limit the President's authority as Commander in Chief and would severely restrict the President's power to conduct the Nation's foreign affairs. I think this is a dangerous amendment that would set a terrible precedent—in fact, I question whether it is based on sound constitutional footing.

Again, Mr. President, I think the Clinton administration has badly mishandled the situation in Haiti. Moreover, I would oppose any effort by the administration to send to troops to Haiti. But, I will oppose the Specter amendment because I believe it to be an unacceptable intrusion by the Congress upon the President's powers.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each, and that the Senate return to the consideration of H.R. 4606 at 10 a.m. on Monday, August 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am authorized by the majority leader to announce there will be no more votes today.

Mr. GORTON addressed the Chair.

TRUE CRIME PREVENTION

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, to most Americans, including this Senator, crime prevention is a fairly simple concept. It means taking steps to avoid becoming a victim of a criminal act or to provide protection for citizens from potential criminals. That could include everything from leaving a porch light on, stopping the newspaper delivery when you are gone for extended periods of time, walking your block with your neighbors to deter drug dealers, teaching your children to avoid talking to strangers, or taking down license plate numbers of suspicious vehicles, just to name a few. These crime prevention measures are commonsense methods to deter criminal behavior.

I have pursued a balanced approach to fighting crime that includes a proper mixture of law enforcement and true crime prevention. For instance, the DARE Program involves law enforcement officers working with students on how to avoid drug dealers. The Triad Program is a grassroots-oriented program that coordinates crime prevention activities between seniors groups and law enforcement. Operation Weed and Seed is perhaps the best example of a coordinated and targeted crime prevention program that has had enormous success in one of Seattle's roughest neighborhoods. Safe Streets in Tacoma receives some minor Federal assistance, and is a model of community mobilization that has cleared streets of drug dealers and gang members by means of phone trees, yard signs, and block watches. Washington State leads the Nation in its community policing programs that has lowered crime rates in some areas simply by getting officers out of their squad cars and getting them closer to the community.

The basic element of success in each one of these crime prevention activities is the simple fact that they are intended to deter a specific criminal act against a law-abiding citizen. They have a proven track record of success and each has this Senator's full support. They work, not surprisingly, because law enforcement is either directly or indirectly related to each crime prevention program. That makes sense because no one wants to prevent crime more than those who have to enforce the law.

What does not make sense, Mr. President, is what this Congress and administration have done to the term "crime prevention." Rather than relating crime prevention activities to law enforcement or criminal behavior, they have included everything from swimming pools to bicycle paths as methods to stop a crime from occurring. They equate a candlelight walk through a rough neighborhood by concerned citizens to scare off drug dealers with grants to encourage arts and crafts classes.

The conference report on the crime bill dropped the single best example of true crime prevention: my amendment to notify communities of violent sexual predators. Law-abiding citizens have a right to know of the dangers around them so they can take the simple precautions such as getting an escort to walk them home or picking kids up after school. Instead, conferees were more concerned about the rights of convicted repeat sexual offenders. They just don't get it. This crime bill would not have helped Polly Klaas or Megan Kanka.

Perhaps the best distinction between the Democrats approach to spending on crime prevention and my own is Operation Weed and Seed. I would have taken a large chunk of the money earmarked for pork barrel social welfare programs that have never worked and would have greatly expanded this crime prevention program that has proven itself. Weed and seed combines tough law enforcement with coordinated and targeted social services, some of which are the very same programs funded under many of the so-called crime prevention programs. The important distinction, however, is that weed and seed has the law enforcement component that follows the seed money for a balanced mixture of law enforcement and prevention. The conference report, on the other hand, does not guarantee the law enforcement element. That is right, cities and high-crime areas have a much greater chance of receiving social spending money than the match-based law enforcement money. The result: seeding without weeding. That is not crime prevention.

Under the title of crime prevention, $7.4 billion in tax payer money includes such deterrence as $900 million for the youth employment and skills crime prevention which would provide grants for job training, apprenticeships, occupational skills, and job experience targeted at youth in high crime, high unemployment areas; $1.8 billion for the Local Partnership Act providing revenue sharing grants to localities for education, drug abuse treatment, and job training programs; $895 million for the model intensive grant program providing grants to fund up to 15 model programs in high crime areas for any reason justified as crime related including deterioration or lack of public facilities and public transportation.

Now, this Senator has no doubt that some activities undertaken by these programs may have some positive impact. I am fully aware of the need in many communities for additional assistance. But what this Senator will not accept is the myth, the scam, that this is crime prevention and therefore should be included in a crime bill.

The Government Accounting Office recently found that there are presently 154 separate, overlapping Federal employment and training programs run by 14 separate executive departments and independent agencies. A total of 50 different offices are responsible for these programs, for which $25 billion was budgeted in fiscal year 1994. The conference report throws another $900 million at these programs.

GAO also found that 266 current prevention programs sponsored by seven Federal departments are serving delinquent and at-risk youth. According to the report, the Government has undertaken "a massive Federal effort on behalf of troubled youth" to the tune of $3.0 billion a year. It continues to state that, "Taken together, the scope and number of multiagency programs show that the Government is responsive to the needs of these young people."

Many of those who support this kind of crime legislation are believers in the what I call the bankshot theory of crime prevention. In their heart of hearts, they honestly believe that if you invest this money in communities for social welfare purposes, you will end up with drug addicts strung out on heroin who would otherwise be inclined to mug an 80-year-old grandmother of her Social Security check, instead, choosing to take a cool dip in the new community pool built by Federal funds. They believe that if you build that bike path, maybe, just maybe, that sex offender will spend the day getting fresh air and exercise rather than stalking his next victim at the school yard. They believe that if only we could build a nicer park for that gang member to enjoy, he will not commit that drive-by shooting tonight that will take the life of an innocent bystander.

They argue that these things take time, perhaps as long as a generation, but that we must start now to change behavior later. Ultimately, they say, the shot will find the corner pocket.

The fundamental problem with this bankshot theory of crime prevention is that we need to stop violent crime today. America is in a crisis of enormous cultural and social consequences due to our inability to deal directly with the threat of criminal violence we face everyday. Crime is the most important issue to Americans and we think about how to avoid it every day. It is on everyone's mind.

Our purpose in 1994 should be to do everything we can to put violent criminals behind bars. Instead, the bankshot theorists of crime prevention have given us swimming pools and bike trails.

This is a crime bill fit for the carefree and easy-spending days of 1964, perhaps, but not the violent and deficit spending days of 1994.

It is a missed opportunity for which I hope, but doubt, the American people will forgive us. Before it is too late, Mr. President, let us reopen the so-called crime bill and make it work for America.

Mrs. HUTCHISON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas, [Mrs. HUTCHISON].

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for allowing me to make my statement before we go into the rest of the debate.

LIFTING THE ARMS EMBARGO ON BOSNIA

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I want to talk about Senator DOLE's amendment that he will offer in the very near future, once again asking this Senate to lift the arms embargo on Bosnia.

Mr. President, what has happened today in that part of the world shows once again the necessity for this Senate and this Congress to act, to say firmly and swiftly the Bosnians should be able to defend themselves with both arms, not with one arm tied behind their back.

The Serbs have shown time after time after time that they are not serious about peace; they are not going to accept the proposal that is on the table. And yet, the Bosnians sit there half armed and unable to really fight for their country the way they ought to be able to and the way they can.

Mr. President, we have talked for months while the people of Bosnia have died. We have talked and we have talked and we have talked. This is an untenable situation.

Many people have said, "Are you prepared to send American troops into Bosnia?" And the answer is no. It is a very firm no. This is not a United States mission.

In fact, it is very important, I believe, that the United States clarify our policy as it regards Bosnia. It is time for us to speak and be heard and be sincere and be firm, and that is that there is not an American interest in Bosnia that would require our troops to get into this conflict.

There is, of course, an American interest in fairness. There is an American interest in the elections and democracy that they are trying to get started in that country. There is an American interest in friendship, trade, help for Bosnia. But we should not send American troops there.

So, what should we do? We should try to help them have peace, at the table, but we should not let them fight without being armed.

I will never forget meeting with Vice President Ganic, the duly elected Vice President of Bosnia when he said, "Please, lift this embargo." He pleaded with the Senate Armed Services Committee. He said, "We are dying anyway. Let us die fighting for our country."

Mr. President, the time has come for us to do that. So, when Senator DOLE does in fact put his amendment on the floor, and we will be able to vote on it once again, I hope this Senate will see from the actions of today by the Serbs that this is not ever going to change with one party to the conflict unarmed. I hope we will have swift action. I hope we will go to the United Nations. I hope we will get world support to let the Bosnians fight—armed —and let them fight for their country.

I appreciate the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPECTER], I appreciate the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. DOLE], who has taken a leadership position in this effort.

I hope the President will listen to the Senate this time and work with us to take a firm position on our role in the world, our role in Bosnia. And I hope we will help these people be able to pick up arms. And I hope we will let them be able to say at least that the 250,000 people who have already died, did not die in vain.

I yield the floor.

ENSURING RUSSIAN TROOP WITHDRAWAL IN THE BALTICS

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I salute President Clinton's recent efforts concerning Russian troop withdrawal from the Baltic States of Latvia and Estonia. As my colleagues know, President Yeltsin is tying Russian troop withdrawal to the citizenship status of the Russian-speaking minorities of both republics. Questions of citizenship are quite legitimate. However, they should not be linked directly to the scheduled withdrawal of the Russian military. Instead, they should be treated as a separate issue, independent of the issue of Baltic sovereignty.

It is imperative that we hold the Russian Government to the withdrawal date of August 31, 1994. Any weakness on the part of the United States would send the message that the Russians can postpone their scheduled withdrawal.

I commend President Yeltsin and Estonian President Lennart Meri for their recent agreement to remove Russian troops from Estonia by the original date of August 31, 1994. This change in policy, after the surprising "nyet" before the G–7 summit, clearly demonstrates President Yeltsin's desire to maintain healthy ties with the West. I trust the Russian Government will follow through on this promise.

Recently, my colleague from Kentucky, Senator MCCONNELL, offered an amendment to H.R. 4426, the Foreign Operations Appropriations bill for fiscal year 1995. I commend Senator MCCONNELL for his leadership on this issue. The amendment easily passed with an overwhelming majority. It stated that if Russian troops do not return home by the proposed deadline, then the United States would withhold aid to Russia until sufficient progress is made. The amendment advanced the deadline for Russian troop withdrawal to August 31, 1994, from the previous date of December 31, 1994. If the Russian Government were to fail to remove the remaining 4,500 troops from Estonia and 2,500 troops from Latvia, then any further United States financial assistance to the Government of Russia would be prohibited. Russian troops must pull out of the Baltic nations by August 31, or face the consequences.

The sovereignty of two nations is at stake, as is our future as a world power. Failure to stand firm on our own resolutions would add to the concern throughout the world regarding U.S. integrity and resolve in foreign policy. We have let the Russian government clearly know the consequences of its behavior in keeping 7,000 Russian troops in Latvia and Estonia. The Russians understand they would lose millions of dollars in economic assistance from the United States.

I have visited the Baltics to examine their reform efforts and the effects of United States aid. While in Latvia 2 years ago, the Russians' reluctance to withdraw their troops disturbed me. Their excuses of 2 years ago finally eroded into the compromise of last week. It is very easy for us to look at this agreement and consider this problem solved, but this would be a grave mistake. To withdraw our pressure prematurely only encourages the Russians to renege on their agreement and postpone their withdrawal. We must hold the Yeltsin Government to its promise of complete independence for the Baltic States.

Being firm with the Yeltsin Government is essential. We can aid the process by encouraging the implementation of citizenship laws in the Baltic nations that fairly treat the Russian minorities. Longtime residents should have the opportunity to become citizens of Latvia or Estonia if they declare their loyalty. We should remain firm in our resolve to end de facto Russian imperialism, while promoting the ideals of democracy for all who live in the Baltic nations.

CHICAGO HOUSING AUTHORITY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to commend to my colleagues an article that recently appeared in the Heritage Foundation publication, Policy Review.

In the article, Vincent Lane, the chairman of the Chicago Housing Authority, explains how "capping crime" is the most important public-housing reform. He writes: "How can you build a community if people are afraid to go out and talk to their neighbors? People have to board up their windows because they're afraid of random gunfire. It's no good offering programs in the evenings if people are afraid to go out and take advantage of them. Safety is our first priority.

Mr. Lane is, apparently, a man of action. In an effort to tackle the crime problem head on, he instituted a policy of requiring visitors to CHA buildings to present photo ID's at the door. He has also implemented midnight curfews and a policy allowing emergency inspections of apartments for illegal weapons. As Mr. Lane explains: "We've held sweeps whenever conditions got so bad in a building that I determined there was a health and safety hazard."

These policies have had a positive impact. While still unacceptably high, the murder rate has declined by almost 50 percent.

Unfortunately, the American Civil Liberties Union has been lurking in the wings, challenging the identification policy and challenging the curfews. Although 18 of the 19 building presidents in the CHA and the overwhelming majority of CHA residents support the sweeps, the ACLU has been active on this front too. Apparently, when it comes to ensuring the safety of CHA residents, the ACLU knows better than the residents themselves.

Mr. President, I want to commend Mr. Lane for his efforts, and I urge my colleagues to take a few moments to read the Policy Review article.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article be inserted in the RECORD immediately after my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PUBLIC HOUSING SWEEP STAKES—MY BATTLE WITH THE ACLU

(By Vincent Lane)

In the late 1980s, the Chicago Housing Authority (CHA) was the worst public housing authority in the country. Its crime rate was three times that of the city as a whole. It seemed as if public housing had a monopoly on nearly every example of inner-city rot: shootings, open-air drug deals, assault, poverty and fear. The first thing I did when I took over CHA was to hold town meetings with the residents, and define what the problems were. The major problem that I heard then—and still hear—was safety.

In the five-and-a-half years since I became CHA chairman, we have made real headway in a number of areas. Since 1991 serious crime of nearly all types has declined between 30 and 60 percent. Sexual assaults, homicides, and battery are all down by 44 percent. At our notoriously violent Cabrini-Green development, for example, there have been only two murders—over a love triangle—and no gang-related killings in the last 18 months. No longer do criminals set curfews; they don't control and keep people from coming and going; they don't sell drugs in the open, or shoot craps in the lobby.

Have we solved all the problems? No. Random shootings, assaults and thefts continue. Have we eliminated gangs? No, because many of the gang members are the children of our residents, and they live in the buildings. We've lowered the CHA's crime rate to only twice that of the city, but it costs $70 million a year. Not exactly a resounding success.

The most important thing we've accomplished, however, is to bring a sense to the residents that it doesn't have to be this way. we've brought a sense of possibility, of innovation to public housing—by not just reacting to problems, but finding long-term strategies that get at their root causes. That's something I've been trying to convey to Congress and to legislative groups, public housing residents, foundations, and the business community.

CAPPING CRIME

Reforming public housing requires simultaneous attacks on several fronts—on welfare, job training, and education. But all these efforts are doomed to failure unless you tackle head-on the crime issue.

When I joined the CHA, the gangs were in control. It was not just a management problems, it was a sociological problem. Gang members were firebombing apartments, setting curfews for the tenants, and refusing to allow janitors to clean buildings.

If you're not in control of property, it's impossible to institute management improvements. I went to the police and told them, "We've got to take these buildings back. We've got to control the access; we've got to issue photo ID cards; and we have to inspect the units and try to clean them up." We've now accomplished these tasks in over 200 buildings.

In 1991 there were 90 homicides throughout the CHA. In 1992, there were 66. In 1993, the number fell to 50. So we're making progress. Sometimes that's overlooked because homicide still is a major problem. But as I've always said, you have to take the first step if you ever hope to complete the journey.

Because of our anti-crime tactics we've tangled in court with the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) nearly from day one. And unfortunately for the residents of the developments, they've prevented us from doing several things. First, in an out-of-court settlement, the ACLU forced us to end our policy of positive verification. The policy has allowed us to require visitors to the buildings to show photo IDs. ACLU lawyers objected on the grounds that in non-public housing guests aren't required to prove their identities. The problem with that argument is that someone can come in and claim to be Yogi Bear, and as long as the tenant backs him up, we have no choice but to let him in. His identity is never on record, and very often he's a drug dealer.

We also set curfews when we first secured buildings, rather than allow the gangs to set them. At midnight, all visitors had to leave; any apartments with visitors who hadn't signed out were checked on. We found that many of the "visitors" had been living there for years, fathering children, without being on the lease. Again, in an out-of-court agreement, the ACLU prevented us from maintaining the curfews.

There has been an interesting byproduct of our policy, however. Although people say, "You can't have a traditional family in public housing," many of the men who were being flushed out of the building came to me and complained that they didn't have any place to go; they wanted to stay with their children and their common-law wives. I suggested that they get on the leases of the apartments, which would make them legitimate tenants. Many of them decided they wanted to get married, but couldn't afford blood tests or rings. So we had a fundraiser, and put together a mass wedding for 18 couples. All but three of the couples are still together.

The curfew, as viewed by the ACLU, was onerous. But that curfew, as a practical matter, forced a lot of men to come forward and make a choice. And it helped stabilize families.

HOUSECLEANING: THE SWEEPS

Another policy we think is essential to restoring order to the developments—and which has been partially blocked by the ACLU—are so-called "building sweeps." We call them emergency inspections, in which Chicago police and CHA security can raid and search apartments without warrants. We've held sweeps whenever conditions got so bad in a building that I determined there was a health and safety hazard.

Because we did not want people saying we were doing an illegal search, when we went into the apartments we did not look under mattresses and in drawers. This was our modus operandi: We sent in a team of people to identify physical deficiencies in each unit. They looked under beds or see if the tiles were loose; they looked in the closets to make sure there were no leaks; they looked on the windowsills to make sure the windows were closing property. Very often, during that process, they ran across drugs, contraband, weapons, and other illegal items.

We were especially concerned about the windows. In the summer of 1993, a number of children fell out of the windows. It was like an epidemic. Yes, it is the mothers' responsibility to keep their children safe; there is no city code here, or in most other cities, that requires child guards on windows. But kids were being injured and killed by these falls, so we reallocated, on an emergency basis, about $7 million to install child guards throughout the system.

One day I inquired how the installations were going at one of our developments, the Robert Taylor Homes. I was told the installers had to "pull out." One of the gang members told the superintendent on the job to "get his white ass out of there." They said they didn't want the window guards in Robert Taylor. Then they sprayed the superintendent's car with automatic weapons fire.

When I asked the staff what they'd done about it, they said they'd wait a week or two, and then see if the workers could sneak back in. That was totally unacceptable to me. There's no way we could go back to the period when the gangs determined when legitimate workmen could come and go from these buildings.

I organized a search for weapons, on the premise that when gunmen are firing randomly at cars and out of windows—things that go on all the time in public housing—it's really no different from a bomb threat in an airport or in an office building. When there's a threat of a bomb and you don't know where it is, you look everywhere you can; you don't run and get a search warrant before you look for the bomb.

We carried out a weapons search and found a number of weapons, ranging from .45s to MAC-10s to high-powered rifles with scopes. The weapons we took out of the building could do a lot of damage on the street in the wrong hands.

This April, a federal judge sided with the ACLU in banning the search for weapons except in emergencies, calling them a violation of Fourth Amendment rights prohibiting unlawful search and seizure. The Clinton administration, however, through the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and the Department of Justice seems willing to allow the searches. Despite the fact that 18 of the 19 building presidents in the CHA support the sweeps—along with the overwhelming majority of residents—I know we haven't heard the last from the ACLU.

THE WELFARE LIE

To understand what's really going on in public housing, you must look at the broader public policy issues. We have set up two standards in America: One for poor minorities, and one for everybody else.

The welfare system and the government assistance system have said, "Assume that poor people can do nothing to help themselves." And so the standard that we set for them was either very low or no standard at all. After three or four generations, we have people who are totally dependent on the government for everything. We should have maintained high standards, and put programs and support systems in place that would help them achieve those high standards.

Anyone who wants to talk about welfare and why poor black women have babies and no fathers around should look at the early record of public assistance. Thirty years ago, public aid wouldn't support families when there was a father in the house. What father, if he cared anything about his children and their mother, would have them penalized because he was out of work?

An underground culture, a system of lying in order to survive, developed in poor communities. Even though the rules have changed, so that now you can be on welfare and have an unemployed male in the house, a culture has built up. It's hard to break the fear that somehow the system will punish the woman and the children if the father is there and unemployed.

Developing this culture was a mistake. Children grow up in an environment where they watch men sneak in after dark, and hide if someone knocks on the door. Soon, children think that's the way it's supposed to be. On a public television program a couple of years ago, they interviewed a young man whose girlfriend was having his baby. He had three or four other babies by three or four other women. He said, "Well, you know, I'm just supposed to bring the babies here, and the state's supposed to take care of them." And it's public policy that triggered that kind of behavior.

NO REASON TO WORK

Another problem is government-created rules that discourage work. Why would we want to prevent a mother on welfare from saving money if she wants to make a better life for her children? But when she saves $1,000, welfare slaps her on the wrist and says, "You shouldn't be sacrificing and saving for something positive. And we're going to cut your grant, or cut you off, or put you in jail." It's insanity.

Public housing's rent agreements reinforce this craziness. The Brooke Amendment, the first federal law controlling public housing rents, was passed some 25 years ago. Because federal resources for providing housing assistance were limited, Congress decided that only the very needy would be assisted. They set up a rent formula: now 30 percent of an individual's income would be charged for rent in public housing.

That may not sound like a bad idea, but it meant that if a family member got a job and started doing well, the family could be paying as much as $800 a month for an apartment that on the private market would be worth no more than $200 a month. It doesn't take long for people to decide that they might as well move someplace where the houses are worth that.

That's exactly what the families who could afford to have done. Unfortunately, the families that replaced them had single, young, female heads of households with children—all on welfare. And that change has ruined public housing. This is not racial issue. In the 1940s, 75 percent or more of the families in public housing worked, and only the balance were on assistance. Now, 90 percent of our families are single mothers on welfare. It's a disaster.

NO MORE ISOLATION

No one should be surprised by the conditions in public housing and inner-city communities, because our public policy did it to us. I believe that people largely are creatures of their environment, and when children only see adults waiting for their welfare checks, gangs, the drug culture, and children having children, they think it's normal. For a young girl in these communities, it's a rite of passage: Have a baby as soon as possible, get your green card, get your public housing unit, get your food stamps—and you're home free.

We have destroyed millions of people in this country with this kind of bad public policy. To undo the damage, we're going to have to break up these concentrations of welfare recipients who simply reinforce themselves with each generation. We know the problems that occur in these communities cannot be isolated and contained—as I think they once were.

The schools are terrible in the cities, and the work force is not being educated. It may take 50 to 100 years, but America is going to be substantially a brown and black country. We're not turning out people in our communities who can help us compete on a global basis. We've got serious problems. America is finally realizing that it's everybody's problem, not just a problem of our core cities and our most depressed neighborhoods—gangs are now moving into suburban communities and shopping malls.

LURING THE WORKING CLASS

We must bring working families back into the cities to create some economic diversity and vitality. One way to do this is to provide multiple housing options for poor people. Public housing gives its residents no choice in terms of location or type of housing. Not everyone wants to live in a high-rise; we should be able to provide options like single-family homes and two-flats. Why? Because when you've got something of value, you will hold onto it. Improve the housing, increase the standards, let people know they have to adopt sociable behavior and can't trash the places they're living in or they'll be evicted. I believe people will change their behavior.

As I noted before, this concentration of poor people, 90 percent of them on welfare, does not work. We need to distribute them throughout the Chicago metropolitan area. Of course, many people are opposed to creating socio-economically mixed communities. One obstacle is our elected officials. Many of them, whether black or white, want to retain the demographic profile of their constituency—a constituency that either won't vote or will vote the way they're told to vote. Elected officials, black and white, have told me, "Vince, it's OK for you to repair these places, but I don't want you moving people around, and moving them out of my district, and bringing in people of a higher income and educational level who may not think I'm doing the kind of job I ought to be doing."

MIXING THINGS UP

It makes more sense to encourage every new private development to include some very low-income families. Don't tell me it won't work, because we've tried it at Lake Parc Place, at 39th and Lake Park. We had 50 percent working people and 50 percent families on welfare. We fixed up the buildings so that any working family would want to live there. The units aren't lavish, but they're safe, clean, and decent. Lake Parc Place has become a rental bargain for working families.

The results at the complex are almost exactly what we'd hoped: after two-and-a-half years, we don't have any vandalism; we don't have any graffiti; crime is practically zero; and 20 percent of the families who started out on welfare now have members working at full-time jobs. Clearly, the mixed-family approach is worth pursuing.

Until we break down the perception that poor is synonymous with bad, we've got to have an incentive for working families to live shoulder to shoulder with poor families. It's a myth that families with children can't live in high-rises successfully. When you drive along North Lake Shore Drive in Chicago, all you see are high-rises. We all know that families are raised successfully in high-rises. The problem in public housing is the concentration of poor people living there, not the buildings themselves.

True, the mixed-family strategy requires both vision and tough-minded negotiating. We took the rehabilitation money that was available and fought with HUD to put in normal amenities: ceiling fans, mini-blinds, ceramic tile in the bath, hardwood cabinets, and frost-free refrigerators. Normally, HUD officials wouldn't allow that, because of their "modest design" standards for poor people. But you can't get working people to rent from you without those amenities.

HUD's standards are often self-defeating. HUD would not approve a $250 air conditioner for poor tenants. But crime goes up dramatically in the summer because it's so hot up in those little units. No one could stand to stay up there in the heat. When people come out, they're hot, they're irritated, and that's when they get into trouble. Summer is when our crime rate goes through the ceiling. If we had air conditioning in the low-income units, where would people be? I suggest they would be in their apartments, in that air conditioning, and not outside, hot and angry, driving up the crime rate.

HOLISTIC SOLUTIONS

We need a holistic approach to our housing problems. It's not enough to build these units and integrate them into neighborhoods that are socio-economically mixed. You can't just take a family out of an old apartment, put them into a new apartment, and expect them to make it on their own. Some will, but there has to be a support system in place that will deal with a range of problems. Many residents are substance abusers; many have children who drop out of school; many are not able to go to work because they haven't learned a skill.

To pull together such a support system we are developing a structured program at local schools, wherever these units are, so that parents will participate with children in education. This will include a mentoring program, creating "residential academies" in CHA buildings.

We also do referrals for substance-abuse problems and mental health counseling, with built-in incentives. We train the participants to be successful in a specific job, help them to get that job, and then set up an escrow program over five to seven years, so that they can accumulate a down payment on a home.

Then what happens? They move where they want to move, and where they can afford to move, just like anybody else. Then their housing unit is freed up for another public housing-eligible family to take advantage of that opportunity.

Public housing units are a valuable commodity. I'm against selling units to their tenants, because as a practical matter, young people and older people are always going to need help with low-cost housing. We ought to get back to what public housing was originally intended to be: A short-term helping hand. During this transition, we should put supports and incentives in place to help people get to the point that most Americans achieve in their lifetimes: To be able to move wherever they want. If housing authorities decide to sell units to the tenants, there must be an immediate hard unit replacement available to maintain the public housing stock.

To teach this sort of self sufficiency, we have training programs for entrepreneurs. Two years ago we created the Resident Self-Employment program. Almost two dozen people have gone through the program and are now trying to capitalize their own businesses.

Rather than letting a contractor repair apartments, we started a "Step-Up" program in 1992. We hired 300 residents, at $14 an hour, to repair apartments. They have repaired 1,500 apartments so far, and many of those people now are moving into apprentice programs with construction trades. Some are going into the environmental area—asbestos abatement and removal, and lead-based paint abatement and removal. We've trained people in pest removal, landscaping, and other skills that we can use to perform meaningful work at the Authority.

We're also helping people who already have skills and who were, in some instances, already running little businesses out of their apartments—hairdressers and seamstresses, for example.They are receiving training in running those businesses. Both of these approaches let people work close to home.

We have set up interagency committees that meet regularly to target resources and prevent the duplication of services. We have used this concept with various departments in the city: with the Park District; with the Police Department on the sweeps; and with the city's lighting department. We have even obtained funding for an alternative school. Government money can be a wasteful trap unless you're working together in partnership.

BRING BACK THE HELPING HAND

When I look at the conditions in most of what passes for public housing today, it seems to me that well-intentioned people have really caused great pain and suffering over the years. Their entire approach to the poor and to public housing has helped destroy self-esteem and undermine families.

We need to get our society back to where we were 40 or 50 years ago. When people came to the cities then, they didn't have welfare systems to provide for them. What they had was a network of extended family. They could stay with relatives until they got jobs and could afford their own apartments—but the pressure was there: get a job, get on your own feet.

Today, the poor know the government will take care of them, so there's no incentive to put forth any effort. We've got to give people a helping hand, and not a handout. We've got to understand that everybody, no matter how poor, can do something to contribute to their independence—and to the well-being of this country.

Most of the public-housing residents out here—the decent ones, and 90 percent of them are decent—support these views. I don't know whether anybody would classify families who have been on welfare for three generations as "conservative," but they certainly recognize that the approaches of the past have not worked for them. We have to find approaches for the future that will enable them to join the American mainstream. It's not enough for government bureaucrats or ACLU lawyers to reject the sort of steps we've taken in Chicago's public housing developments.

How can you build a community if people are afraid to go out and talk to their neighbors? People have to board up their windows because they're afraid of random gunfire. It's no good offering programs in the evenings if people are afraid to go out and take advantage of them. Safety is our first priority. Because rebuilding neighborhoods requires people getting together to find solutions to their common problems, and that's not possible if you have to bolt the doors and windows and not let your neighbor come in to talk.

FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE 1993 ECONOMIC PLAN'S PASSAGE

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today to mark the first anniversary of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993. A year ago, the Senate and House of Representatives passed President Clinton's economic plan by the slimmest of margins and without a single Republican vote. I am proud to say that I voted for last year's budget bill.

After a year, I think it is appropriate to see where our economy is today under this plan.

Today, economic growth is up. The economy is growing at a steady pace of 3.7 percent. Since President Clinton took office, the private sector has created 3.8 million jobs—1.5 million more jobs than were created in all 4 years of the previous administration. As a result, unemployment is at 6 percent—a 3½ year low. And today's growth rate equals 77,000 new jobs per day.

Today, the deficit is down. The budget deficit for 1994 is now projected to be $220 billion, $85 billion less than projected before passage of the 1993 economic plan. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that the 1995 deficit will decline to $167 billion, $135 billion less than projected before the President's plan was adopted. As a percentage of the Gross Domestic Product, the deficit will be cut in half—from 4.9 percent in 1992 to 2.4 percent in 1995. By 1998, the strict spending measures in 1993 budget law are estimated to trim the deficit by $691 billion.

And today business is booming. Last year, more new businesses were incorporated than any other year since World War II. Besides new business, old business are also doing well—business failures have declined to their lowest level since 1988. And investment in new plant and equipment has soared to 13 percent in the last year, the highest percentage in a decade.

What do all these numbers mean? They mean the 1993 economic plan is working and working well. I applaud the President's vision in proposing it, and Congress' courage in adopting it.

Mr. President, I ask for unanimous consent that the attached article from yesterday's Wall Street Journal by Albert R. Hunt entitled "Last Year's Budget Deal Was a Success" be printed in the RECORD after my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAST YEAR'S BUDGET DEAL WAS A SUCCESS

(By Albert R. Hunt)

"Clearly, this is a job-killer in the shortrun. The impact on job creation is going to be devastating."

—Rep. Dick Armey (R., Texas), August. 2, 1993

"The tax increase will lead to a recession and will actually increase the deficit."

—Rep. Newt Gingrich (R., Ga.), Aug. 5, 1993

"I will make you this bet. I am willing to risk the mortgage on it * * * the deficit will be up; unemployment will be up; in my judgment, inflation will be up."

—Sen. Robert Packwood (R., Ore.), Aug. 6, 1993

It was exactly a year ago this week that the 1993 deficit reduction measure, with tax increases on wealthier Americans, cleared both houses of Congress by the narrowest of margins.

Fortunately, Bob Packwood has a reasonably small mortgage on his Washington condominium. All those dire Republican predictions have not materialized; unemployment is down, not up, the deficit is lower and inflation hasn't risen.

"I was wrong," Sen. Packwood acknowledges with rare candor. "It reminds me of a fraternity brother who used to write down all of our New Year's resolutions and then a year later had the audacity to read them."

Even the take-no-prisoners conservative Dick Armey displays a tinge of self-effacement when asked about his Chicken Little predictions of a year ago. "Clinton has got to be the luckiest president ever," says the Texas Republican, who then adds: "The one thing we didn't appreciate was the extent to which the economy would live off the relaxed policies of the Federal Reserve."

OK, let's take that latest Republican rationalization. This past Jan. 31, Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan said: "The actions taken last year to reduce the federal budget deficit have been instrumental in creating the basis for declining inflation expectations and easing pressures on longterm interest rates." In short, Mr. Armey, those "relaxed policies" were facilitated by the 1993 deficit reduction act that you said would be so disastrous.

Since the 1993 budget act was passed, the economy has grown at almost a 4% annual rate, not spectacular but not bad. This growth has been centered on the private sector. In June the economy added an impressive 379,000 jobs, causing some economists to modify their forecast of a second-half slowdown.

A year ago today, Sen. Phil Gramm (R., Texas), a self-proclaimed economic expert, confidently predicted not only that the deficit measure would be a near-term calamity, but that "the deficit four years from today will be higher than it is today, not lower." Here are the inconvenient facts, Sen. Gramm: The Congressional Budget Office now estimates the fiscal 1997 deficit at $192 billion, or more than $100 billion less than the so-called baseline projection of a year earlier.

If the Republicans were simply wrong on their economic predictions, they were disingenuous on taxes. The claim that this was a huge tax increase on most Americans is a fraud. Income taxes were boosted for only the most affluent taxpayers, about 1.4 million or little more than 1% of the tax-paying population. The top Federal rate was raised to 39.6%, still well below the 50% rate that existed in 1986, six years into the Reagan administration and below the top rate in almost every other major industrial nation.

The legislation also icluded a 4.3 cent a gallon hike in the gasoline tax. The CBO calculates that, even including indirect costs, that amounts to higher taxes of a grand annual total of $36 per driver. Gasoline prices remain about half of what they are in most other countries.

Moreover, the critics often conveniently forget that taxes were reduced for more than 15 million working poor families, who benefited from the expanding of the earned income tax credit. This was the most important antipoverty measure enacted in years, one supported by many Republicans as well as Democrats.

Overall, the gains in the economy and the brighter deficit outlook are due in part to a few extraordinary factors. The savings-and-loan mess has gone from net drain to net gain. And there are some unrealistic savings in the Clinton administration defense budget, according to the General Accounting Office.

Responsible economic experts on the right, like the Heritage Foundation's Dan Mitchell, argue that, while the Clinton performance outstrips his predecessor, the gains would have been far better with a more conservative pro-growth policy. Mr. Mitchell notes the current recovery lags behind most other recent recoveries.

Nevertheless, the CBO estimates that more than two-thirds of the deficit savings in the next several years can be directly attributed to the 1993 deficit measure. Whatever small drag there is from higher taxes on a few Americans has been more than offset by the gains in a lower deficit and consumer confidence, which is up 54% since last August, according to the Conference Board.

Consumer prices (12 mo. avg. ending in June) (percent)	3.0	2.5
Stock market (Aug. 1 DJ industrials)	3,539.47	3,798.17

The Republicans, undercut by all the data, have a final refrain: just wait until the November elections. There's little doubt that the GOP will score major victories this November, probably exceeding the average gains of the opposition party in off-year elections. But polls, focus groups and conversations with politicians of both parties demonstrate that the Democratic weakness has nothing to do with the deficit and tax legislation of 1993. Last month's Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll showed that only 15% of the public thinks that legislation was bad for the country, although 62% think it didn't make any real difference.

In the not-too-distant future—probably after the next presidential election—the deficit issue will have to be joined again. The deficit starts ballooning again by the early part of the next century. Not unexpectedly, the two major elements of any plan will have to be entitlements and taxes.

The politics will look bad. It's never easy to raise anyone's taxes. And while there's a lot of clamor now for curbing entitlements, the reality will be a lot more difficult than the rhetoric. Americans strongly favor reducing entitlements but oppose cutting specific programs.

But when the politicians then are grappling with those difficult decisions, they would do well to remember the 1993 prophets of doom and how wrong they were.

MARKETING SEASON

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, ask any farmer what their happiest day is during the tobacco season and chances are they will quickly say it is the time when they take their crop to the market for sale.

It is a day that represents Christmas presents, tuition payments, mortgage payments, farm operating loan payments—and hopefully some profit—all tied into one. A farmer once told me there is nothing quite like the feeling of having all your tobacco bales on the truck and headed to the market, knowing that a year's worth of sweat and toil will soon pay off.

Like most facets of the tobacco life, the marketing season continues the traditions of family, work, and community. The tobacco warehouses become a hub of activity surrounded by festivals and parades marking this special time of the year.

I do not know how many of my colleagues have been to a tobacco warehouse to watch the sales, but they are unlike any other auction you have ever seen.

The burley tobacco warehouses will start accepting tobacco in October and the sales traditionally begin on the first Monday before Thanksgiving. After a short break at Christmas, the sales resume and usually conclude sometime in March.

The sale is a rather raucous occasion, with an auctioneer walking down row after row of USDA-graded tobacco bundles, singing out the auction call as buyers closely follow, purchasing for the manufacturers. And you can be sure that farmers are nearby taking special note of the bids their crop is receiving.

Whatever tobacco is not sold goes into what is known as the pool. These stocks become part of the Federal no-net-cost program, run through the tobacco-purchasing cooperatives, and are sold in following years.

Each of the buyers, whether through hand signals, head nods, or a wink can purchase a basket of tobacco if they have the highest bid. However, the farmer always retains the right to either accept the bids for his tobacco or try to sell it again at a later time during the market season.

These sales are conducted in 98 warehouses all over my State of Kentucky from Maysville to Bloomfield to Paducah to London.

Anyone will tell you that the tobacco leaf being sold at these markets is the best in the world. And I can guarantee you that a farmer in Springfield, KY feels as much pride when his produce is sold as an autoworker does when that new car comes rolling off the assembly line in Detroit, MI, or Louisville, KY.

But along with that pride runs a deep feeling that all has not been right with the tobacco market for the last few years—and more hard times may lay just around the corner.

My farmers have watched as a product that means over $1 billion in annual farm income to my State comes under daily attack from all sides.

They have watched as imported tobacco flooded into this country, driving down the amount of tobacco they were able to sell. In 1991, farmers in Kentucky were able to grow and sell 486 million pounds of tobacco. In 1993, that number was down to 405 million pounds. At the same time in 1991, approximately 136 million pounds of imported tobacco came into this country. It rose to over 198 million for the year of 1993.

And what does that mean to my farmers? Last year, it cost them as much as $140 million in sales. I know around here that does not always sound like a lot of money, but what industry in your State could take that kind of hit and still survive?

As part of a Louisville Courier Journal series about the effect of imports on our State's economy, a tobacco farmer from Harrison county told how he was forced to put off buying a new tractor and making repairs to barns and fences on his farm.

"I'm going to have to make due with what I've got * * *" he said. Another farmer interviewed said, "Usually about this time of year I'm getting excited about starting next year's crop, but that feeling isn't there this year."

We tried to help them out by passing legislation to limit the amount of imported tobacco used in domestic cigarettes. If our law was not in place, some estimate Kentucky farmers would have lost $342 million in 1994 sales.

As many of my colleagues know, we are keeping up our efforts in this regard with the upcoming GATT treaty. Some have tried to undercut our work, but all we are trying to do is level the playing field and ensure our farmers have a fighting chance in the world trade market.

We are trying to address inequities in the world market. Is it fair when certain countries completely prohibit the importation of our tobacco while at the same time send tens of thousands of pounds into this country?

That is the choice we are facing.

Mr. President, over the past week I have taken to the Senate floor to speak from the heart about a product that is interwoven into my State's history, its people, and their livelihoods.

I hope that in some way I have helped educate some of my colleagues about tobacco and the situation we currently face. I also hope some of my colleagues now realize the repercussions my State will face if the many antitobacco efforts—both legislative and nonlegislative—are successful.

President Eisenhower once said, "Farming looks mighty easy when your plow is a pencil and you're a thousand miles from the corn field."

I believe this same sentiment also applies to the tobacco patch.

The tobacco farmers and their families are just like people you know—people who are trying to make a living the best way they can. I hope they receive the utmost consideration from my colleagues during this health care debate.

FACES OF THE HEALTH CARE CRISIS

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise once again in my effort to put a face on the health care crisis in our country. Today, I would like to share the story of the Steve and Kathy Krahner and their 7 year old daughter, Kari, of Highland, MI.

Kari was born prematurely in 1986 after a difficult pregnancy. Kathy had to spend the last 2 months of her pregnancy in the hospital with pre-eclampsia or high blood pressure, and accumulated a $20,000 medical bill. Fortunately, her hospital stay was paid for by the health insurance policy Steve received through his job at a local auto parts supplier.

Little Kari experienced repeated infections and medical problems as a toddler. Then one morning in October 1991, Kathy discovered Kari lying on blood soaked sheets with blood seeping from her left ear. Kari was rushed to the hospital, where she was diagnosed with Primary Immune Deficiency Disorder, a condition in which the body is unable to fight off germs and infections. Since then, Kari has had to receive intravenous gamma globulin treatments every 4 weeks to keep her immune system operating. The cost of the intravenous treatments was $2,500 a month, and again it was covered by Steve's workplace insurance.

Suddenly in April 1992, Steve was laid off from the job he had held since he was 17 years old, almost 25 years. On top of the stress of being laid off during Michigan's harsh recession, the Krahners were terrified over losing health insurance coverage for Kari's lifesaving treatments. Continuing the coverage on their own would have cost $421 a month, almost 50 percent of what Steve would collect through unemployment.

Fortunately, Kari's serious medical condition made her eligible for assistance through a State program for disabled children. The State of Michigan took over payments of the health insurance premiums from Steve's employer for 18 months and then converted the policy into Blue Cross/Blue Shield coverage for hospital services.

Because it is cheaper for the State to buy family insurance than to provide the care directly to Kari, Steve, and Kathy have coverage for hospital services along with their daughter. The State also pays for Kari's outpatient treatments and medications. But Steve and Kathy have no coverage at all for their outpatient care and prescription drug needs.

Kathy, 41, and Steve, 42, are relieved and grateful that their daughter's medical care is covered. But they themselves are not covered for the care they need.

Kathy has diabetes, asthma, and high blood pressure, and Steve suffers from high blood pressure as well. They both require constant medication and regular medical visits to monitor their conditions. These pre-existing conditions make it impossible to find affordable health coverage on their own. Between the two of them, they pay approximately $350 per month for medical expenses. This is over 40 percent of their monthly income.

Unable to find work in the Detroit area during the recession, Steve learned the tilting and stone masonry trade and has started his own stone masonry business. Although he has secured some free-lance contracts, Steve doesn't have a consistent flow of business. The Krahner's income is $11,000 a year, or $846 per month. Kathy was once a licensed paramedic, but a back injury she sustained from a work accident disqualifies her from working in the field. She now earns minimal income from sporadic babysitting jobs and work in a deli, but the demands of caring for Kari during her frequent illnesses mean that Kathy cannot commit to a full-time job. After paying their housing and medical expenses, the Krahners are left with $11 for food and other household necessities every month. Clearly, the family is forced to rely on family and friends. They are now at risk of losing their home.

Mr. President, Steve and Kathy are victims of economic hard times. They want to provide for their daughter and take care of their own health. Both of them have conditions that can be controlled with proper preventive care, but they cannot afford to pay for the medical treatment that would keep them healthy. Ironically, they only have coverage if their conditions worsen to the point that they must be hospitalized. All Americans should have access to affordable health care that provides the benefits they need. Mr. President, I will continue to work with my colleagues in the Senate to pass a health care reform plan that guarantees access to affordable health care for all Americans.

IS CONGRESS IRRESPONSIBLE; YOU BE THE JUDGE OF THAT

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, as of the close of business on Thursday, August 4, the Federal debt stood at $4,643,454,831,491.69. This means that on a per capita basis, every man, woman, and child in America owes $17,810.74 as his or her share of that debt.

HEALTH REFORM

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, when the President of the United States waved his veto pen in the State of the Union Address last January, he stated very clearly:

> If the legislation you send me does not guarantee every American private health insurance that can never be taken away, I will take this pen, veto that legislation, and we'll come right back here and start over again.

Well, Mr. President, get ready to veto the Gephardt bill and the Mitchell bill. Neither of these bills meets your test. Much of what you have said since then fails the test—except one cogent answer you gave to a Governor in Boston last month at the NGA meeting.

Mr. President, all the rhetoric has been focusing on the guarantee.

In all the talk about promises, about universal coverage, about mandates, about triggers—hard, soft, and in between, I have not forgotten your insistence on private health insurance—for every American.

Mr. President, the bills presented by you, by Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. GEP-

HARDT don't guarantee private health plans to all Americans. I hope you promise to veto every one.

The only way to make good on your guarantee is to give everyone an opportunity to buy a private health plan. Are you a man of your word?

The only way to make good on your guarantee is to make that plan affordable to each person to whom the guarantee is made. Otherwise, it's an empty promise. Are you a man of your word?

The only way to get affordable prices is to reduce medical and insurance costs while maintaining and improving quality of care and expand access to services. Are you a man of your word?

So, as I began looking through the 1,400, or so pages, of the latest Democratic proposal, the Mitchell bill, I went on a hunt for the marketplace.

I've been through this drill before. I searched for market forces in the Clinton bill during a snowstorm last December. I found vestiges of market principles entangled in a web of Federal and State government regulation, mandates, civil and criminal penalties.

I searched in vain for real market forces in the Labor Committee product. Same result.

Now, here I go again. Same problem. The difference is that the regulatory structures, the mandates, the rules, the regulations, are more subtle. But then I'm getting experienced at this. The Mitchell bill is awash in hidden-cost shifts, and nimble ways of taking productivity incentives out of markets.

But all's not lost. There is a bill at the desk right now. The Finance Committee bill, the only truly bipartisan bill in the U.S. Senate. S. 2351. It capitalized on the wave of market forces now at work all over this country. If you want to find how to guarantee private health insurance and to encourage medical markets, I urge you to read that bill.

To make markets work, you need informed and active buyers negotiating in the marketplace the way growing numbers of self-insured employers are today. The market rules must encourage value-conscious buying. Firms must be motivated to comparison shop on the basis of price and quality. Buyers must not be insulated from the cost consequences of their decisions.

Like other partisan Democratic bills, the Mitchell bill is full of ways to prevent employers from being good buyers. Here are few examples.

Employers up to 500 employees are forced into community-rated purchasing pools. In most communities in America, that represents 80 percent of employers or more. These employers cannot negotiate. They must accept the community-rated prices.

What was designed to encourage group buying for small firms, with little leverage in the market, has been converted into a mechanism to centralize pricing. All these employers are also required to offer a purchasing cooperative—doesn't sound voluntary to me.

The bill requires all community-rated plans to participate in a risk-adjustment process with the experience rated plans. This is simply a sophisticated vehicle to transfer dollars from cost-effective health plans to less cost-effective ones, undermining competition. Forcing the wise shoppers to pay for the unwise shoppers.

Functioning markets require sellers actively competing for business. The Mitchell bill imposes lots of new Government in what was once a private market. A standard health benefit package is intended to be a tool to facilitate markets by allowing consumers to compare similar products on the basis of price and quality and to annually compare plans on the basis of service performance.

The Democratic bills, including the Mitchell bill, expand the National Benefit Commission into a big regulatory bureaucracy that has the power to substitute its judgment for the judgment of doctors and health plans. Government will tell us what is medically necessary; not the doctors.

I am afraid that the expansion of the FEHBP means that more people will buy their private health plans through the Federal Government. Why anyone in Minnesota would willingly want a Government buyer in Washington, DC, to select their local health plan choice is beyond me. Especially when they could own a piece of a private, local purchasing coop without any cost. That's what the Finance Committee bill allows Minnesotans to do.

The Mitchell bill does not have any incentives for purchasers to buy wisely. There is no limit on tax-sheltered health spending. The bigger the company, the richer the buyer, the more tax subsidy.

There is no means test on high-cost plans, a variant on the tax cap. Instead, we get a Government-imposed price-control mechanism with a penalty tax as an enforcement of the Government controls.

Remember, the President promised the American people private health plans. The Finance Committee bill extends that promise to the elderly. For nearly 30 years America's elderly have been forced, at age 65, to join the Federal Government's single-payer system we call Medicare.

The Finance Committee bill gives seniors a way out of this wasteful Canadian system back into America—private health insurance that can never be taken away. The Government will pay a share of that premium.

The Mitchell bill drops out all those provisions. Instead, it slashes payments to doctors and hospitals who serve the Medicare patients, using all the proceeds for a new drug benefit. The unbelievable fact is that America's largest organization of seniors [AARP] has encouraged this denial of choice—in order to be able to benefit from its sale of both unnecessary supplemental plans for the 87 percent who need to add to the benefits in the Government plan, and a new line of profits—the prescription drug business.

The result, fewer people will have a choice of a private plan. And the debilitating cost shift from the underfunded Government programs is made worse not better.

Working people are forced to pay more in three ways: First, higher payroll taxes for the nearly bankrupt Medicare trust fund; second, 24 billion dollars' worth of cost shifts from the underfunded public programs; third, community-rated employer pools which make young people pay three times as much as older people based on percent of income.

Of course, Mr. GEPHARDT's Ways and Means-inspired Medicare Part C takes the President even closer to his veto threat. It would move millions more people out of the private system into a Government-run single-payer system. The President has said that Medicare is a private system because you can see a private doctor. By that definition, so's Canada.

No, Mr. President. Medicare is a Federal Government program, funded right here in Congress with tax dollars. It has price-controlled payments to doctors and hospitals, and Government-determined access to items and services, with an 11 percent growth rate while the American system is growing at only at 6 percent including the costs shifted on it from Government's Medicare and Medicaid programs.

Mr. President, you promised private health insurance. I've seen private health insurance. Medicare Part C is not it.

Mr. MITCHELL, there are many in this body who will oppose your proposal because it has a triggered employer mandate.

Unfortunately, the media and the White House have focused on this issue. They've made a vote on the mandate trigger an article of faith.

The real problems go much deeper. They go to the heart of what the Republican task force members have been working toward for 4 years. They go to the heart of what the bipartisan mainstream group has been discussing for months. They go the heart of what is best for the people of America and for the best health care system in the world: the guarantee to every American of private health insurance that can never be taken away.

Here's the truth they won't tell you. When it comes to insurance that can never be taken away from you, they know that politicians can't be trusted not to take it away. Politicians won't pay for their promises and you'll lose. So, if they force employers to pay, then they can say they delivered on their promise. Someone else can pay. And politicians take the credit. But the dirty little secret is employers don't pay. People do. You do.

There is an answer to this deceit. It is close at hand. The Finance Committee bill, while not perfect, will get us there.

I cheered the President when he asked Congress to produce a bill that would guarantee private health insurance. If he wants to make good on that promise, he must look to the bipartisan middle in the Senate. We can deliver you a bill that can pass the Senate. More importantly, we can help you make good on your promise to the American people.

I don't have a veto pen. But, I do have a vote. And I hope to cash it in favor of a bill that will accomplish that test. I will not cast it in favor of a bill that does not.

REMEMBERING JOE CUMMINGS

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a man who devoted his life to the education and character development of every student with whom he came in contact, a man who was the epitome of excellence as a educator, coach, and motivator. Mr. President, I am speaking of Joe Cummings, of Fairport, NY. Joe Cummings passed away this past year and in honor and memory of one of their most revered citizens, the Fairport Central School District, in conjunction with the Fairport-Perinton community, will be recognizing his many contributions by naming the Fairport High School football field in his honor on September 10, 1994.

Joe Cummings was born on October 27, 1911. He earned his bachelor of science degree from Cortland State College and his master of science from Columbia University. He made his mark as a gifted athlete when he represented the United States in gymnastics at the 1936 Olympic games in Berlin, Germany. From 1936 through 1973, Joe served as a teacher, coach, and went on to become the first athletic director of the Fairport Central School District. His work at the school was briefly interrupted during the time that he served in World War II as a lieutenant in the U.S. Navy. Joe Cummings was a unique individual whose lifetime focus was to improve his community by working with young people. From 1937 to 1953, Joe Cummings developed and served as the director of the Fairport-Perinton Youth Commission. He was the past president of the Fairport Rotary, and the founder of the Fairport-East Rochester "Little Brown Jug Game," which continued for a total of 49 seasons. In addition to these great achievements, Joe Cummings helped to establish the Monroe County High School hockey league in 1968 and worked to develop the local swimming program for the disabled.

Throughout the course of Joe Cummings' life, his numerous achievements and accomplishments have not gone unnoticed. In addition to the Fairport High School football field to be named in his honor, Joe Cummings has been presented with the Rochester Club Distinguished Service Award in 1950, the Touchdown Club of Rochester Football Award in 1961, the IAABO Board Coach Award in 1966, and the New York State Coaches' Association Special Honor Award in 1970. In addition to these great honors, Joe Cummings was inducted into both the Monroe County Athletics and the Cortland College Halls of Fame.

Joe Cummings' accomplishments were great, his approach was philanthropic, and he was a friend to all who knew him. We are grateful to Joe for his relentless dedication to the Fairport community. We will remember and he will be sorely missed.

Mr. President, I thank you.

"TITLE XVII—GUN-FREE SCHOOLS

"Sec. 17001. Gun-free requirements.

"TITLE I—HELPING CHILDREN IN NEED MEET HIGH STANDARDS

"SEC. 1001. DECLARATION OF POLICY AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

"(a) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Congress declares it to be the policy of the United States that a high-quality education for all individuals and a fair and equal opportunity to obtain that education are a societal good, are a moral imperative, and improve the life of every individual, because the quality of our individual lives ultimately depends on the quality of the lives of others.

"(2) ADDITIONAL POLICY.—The Congress further declares it to be the policy of the United States to expand the program authorized by this title over the fiscal years 1995 through 1999 by increasing funding for this title by at least $750,000,000 over baseline each fiscal year and thereby increasing the percentage of eligible children served in each fiscal year with the intent of serving all eligible children by fiscal year 2004.

"(b) RECOGNITION OF NEED.—The Congress recognizes that—

"(1) although the achievement gap between disadvantaged children and other children has been reduced by half over the past two decades, a sizable gap remains, and many segments of our society lack the opportunity to become well educated;

"(2) the most urgent need for educational improvement is in schools with high concentrations of children from low-income families and achieving the National Education Goals will not be possible without substantial improvement in such schools;

"(3) educational needs are particularly great for low-achieving children in our Nation's highest-poverty schools, children with limited-English proficiency, children of migrant workers, children with disabilities, Indian children, children who are neglected or delinquent, and young children and their parents who are in need of family-literacy services; and

"(4) in order for all students to master challenging standards in core academic subjects as described in the third National Education Goal described in section 102(3) of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act, students and schools will need to maximize the time spent on teaching and learning the core academic subjects, and students who receive pullout instruction at the expense of core academic subject learning time can fall further behind in learning the core academic subjects.

"(c) WHAT HAS BEEN LEARNED SINCE 1988.—To enable schools to provide all children a high-quality education, this title builds upon the following learned information:

"(1) All children can master challenging content and complex problem-solving skills. Research clearly shows that children, including low-achieving children, can succeed when expectations are high and all children are given the opportunity to learn challenging material.

"(2) Piecemeal reform, particularly when not tied to an overall vision of teaching to, and helping all children reach, high standards does not work.

"(3) Use of low-level tests that are not aligned with schools' curricula fails to provide adequate information about what children know and can do and encourages curricula and instruction that focus on low-level skills measured by those tests.

"(4) Resources are effective when children have full access to quality regular school programs and receive supplemental help through extended-time activities.

"(5) Intensive and sustained professional development for teachers and other school staff, focused on teaching and learning and on helping children attain high standards, is too often not provided.

"(6) All parents can contribute to their children's success by helping at home and becoming partners with teachers so that children can achieve high standards.

"(7) Decentralized decisionmaking is a key ingredient of systemic reform. Schools need the resources, flexibility, and authority to design and implement effective strategies for bringing their children to high levels of performance.

"(8) Opportunities for students to achieve to high standards can be enhanced through a variety of approaches such as public school choice and charter schools.

"(9) Attention to academics alone cannot ensure that all children will reach high standards. The health and other needs of children that affect learning are frequently unmet, particularly in high-poverty schools, thereby necessitating coordination of services to better meet children's needs.

"(10) Resources provided under this title have not been adequately targeted on the highest-poverty school districts and schools that have children most in need.

"(11) Equitable and sufficient resources, particularly as such resources relate to the quality of the teaching force, have an integral relationship to high student achievement.

"(d) STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to enable schools to provide opportunities for children served to acquire the same basic and advanced skills and knowledge as children not served under this title. This purpose shall be accomplished by—

"(1) ensuring high standards and aligning the efforts of States, local educational agencies, and schools to help children served under this title to reach such standards;

"(2) providing children an enriched and accelerated educational program, including, when appropriate, the use of the arts and humanities, through schoolwide programs or through additional services that increase the amount and quality of instructional time;

"(3) promoting schoolwide reform and access of children, from the earliest grades, to effective instructional strategies and challenging academic content that support intensive complex thinking and problem-solving experiences;

"(4) significantly upgrading the quality of instruction by providing staff in participating schools with substantial opportunities for ongoing professional development;

"(5) coordinating services under all parts of this title with each other, with other educational services, and, to the extent feasible, with health and social service programs funded from other sources;

"(6) affording parents meaningful opportunities to participate in the education of their children at home and at school;

"(7) distributing resources, in amounts sufficient to make a difference, to areas where needs are greatest;

"(8) improving accountability, as well as teaching and learning, by using State assessment systems designed to measure how well children served under this title are achieving high State student performance standards expected of all children;

"(9) providing greater decisionmaking authority and flexibility to schools in exchange for greater responsibility for student performance; and

"(10) encouraging the development of innovative models for recruitment, induction, retention, and assessment of new, highly qualified teachers, especially such teachers from historically underrepresented groups.

"SEC. 1002. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"(a) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY GRANTS.—For the purpose of carrying out part A of this title, other than section 1117(e), there are authorized to be appropriated $7,500,000,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years.

"(b) EVEN START.—For the purpose of carrying out part C, there are authorized to be appropriated $120,000,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years.

"(c) EDUCATION OF MIGRATORY CHILDREN.—For the purpose of carrying out part D, there are authorized to be appropriated $310,000,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years.

"(d) EDUCATION FOR NEGLECTED OR DELINQUENT YOUTH.—For the purpose of carrying out part E, there are authorized to be appropriated $40,000,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years.

"(f) FEDERAL ACTIVITIES.—

"(1) SECTION 1601.—For the purpose of carrying out section 1601, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years.

"(2) SECTION 1602.—For the purpose of carrying out section 1602, there are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years.

"PART A—MAKING HIGH-POVERTY SCHOOLS WORK

"Subpart 1—Basic Program Requirements

"SEC. 1111. STATE PLANS.

"(a) PLANS REQUIRED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any State desiring to receive a grant under this part shall submit to the Secretary a plan, developed in consultation with local educational agencies, teachers, pupil services personnel, administrators, other staff, and parents, that satisfies the requirements of this section.

"(2) CONSOLIDATION PLAN.—A State plan submitted under paragraph (1) may be submitted as part of a consolidation plan under section 10302.

"(b) STANDARDS AND ASSESSMENT PROVISIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) Each State plan shall describe—

"(i) the high-quality academic standards for all children that will be used by the State, its local educational agencies, and its schools in subjects, as determined by the State, to carry out this part, and for those subjects for which a

State does not have standards and students are served under this part, describe a process for ensuring that such students are taught the same knowledge and skills and held to the same expectations as all children;

"(ii)(I) two levels of high performance, proficient and advanced, that determine how well children are mastering the material in the State content standards; and

"(II) a third level, partially proficient, to provide complete information about the progress of the lower-performing children toward achieving to the proficient and advanced levels of performance; and

"(iii) the steps the State will take to help each local educational agency and school affected by the State plan develop the capacity to comply with each of the requirements of sections 1112(c)(3), 1114(b), and 1115(c) that is applicable to such agency or school.

"(B) If a State has State content standards or State student performance standards developed under title III of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act or an aligned set of assessments for all students developed under such title, or if not developed under such title, adopted under another process, the State shall use those standards and assessments, modified, if necessary, to conform with the requirements of paragraphs (1)(A)(i), (2), and (3).

"(C) If a State has not adopted State content standards and State student performance standards for all students, the State plan shall include a strategy for developing State content standards and State student performance standards for elementary and secondary school children served under this part in subjects as determined by the State, including at least mathematics, and reading or language arts, which standards shall include the same knowledge, skills, and levels of performance expected of all children, and for those subjects for which a State will not develop standards and students are served under this part, include a strategy for developing a process for ensuring that such students are taught the same knowledge and skills and held to the same expectations as all children.

"(2) ADEQUATE YEARLY PROGRESS.—(A) Each State plan shall include a description, based on assessments described under paragraph (3), of what constitutes adequate yearly progress of—

"(i) any school served under this part toward enabling all children to meet the State's student performance standards; and

"(ii) any local educational agency that receives funds under this part toward enabling all children within its jurisdiction to meet the State's student performance standards.

"(B) Adequate yearly progress under this paragraph shall be defined in a manner that results in continuous and substantial yearly improvement of each local educational agency and school sufficient to achieve the goal of all children served under this part meeting the State's proficient and advanced level of performance, particularly eligible children described in section 1115(b).

"(3) ASSESSMENTS.—Each State plan shall include a description of the set of high-quality, yearly student assessments, including at least mathematics, and reading or language arts, in one grade in each school, that will be used as the primary means of determining the yearly performance of each local educational agency and school served under this part in enabling all children served under this part to meet the State's student performance standards. Such assessments shall—

"(A) be the same assessments used to measure the performance of all children, if the State measures the performance of all children;

"(B) be aligned with such State's content standards in subjects for which the State has developed standards in accordance with subparagraph (A) or (C) of paragraph (1);

"(C) involve multiple measures of student performance, including measures that assess higher order thinking skills and understanding;

"(D) provide for—

"(i) the participation in such assessments of all students with diverse learning needs; and

"(ii) the adaptations and accommodations necessary to permit such participation;

"(E) be used for the purposes for which they are valid and reliable and be consistent with relevant, nationally recognized professional and technical standards for such assessments, except that assessment measures that do not satisfy the requirements of this subparagraph may be included as one of the multiple measures, so long as a State includes in the State plan information regarding the State's efforts to validate such measures;

"(F) be capable of providing coherent information about student attainments relative to the State content standards;

"(G) support effective curriculum and instruction;

"(H) provide individual student interpretive and descriptive reports, which may include scores and other information on the attainment of student performance standards;

"(I) provide statistically reliable results for economically disadvantaged children disaggregated by gender, major ethnic or racial groups, limited-English proficient children, children with disabilities, migratory children, and other educationally meaningful categories of children;

"(J) include students who have resided in the area served by a local educational agency for a full academic year but have not attended a single school served by such agency for a full academic year, except that the performance of students who have attended more than one school in the local educational agency in any academic year shall be used only in determining the progress of the local educational agency, unless the State provides otherwise; and

"(K) particularly for assessments given in kindergarden, or grades one or two, be developmentally appropriate.

"(4) OTHER INDICATORS.—Each State plan may include a description of any other indicators, such as rates of attendance, graduation, and school-to-work or school-to-college transition, that will be used in addition to the assessments required by paragraph (3) in determining the yearly performance of each local educational agency and school served under this part.

"(5) TRANSITIONAL STATEWIDE ASSESSMENTS.—(A)(i) If a State does not have State content standards and State student performance standards that meet the requirements of paragraph (1) or assessments that meet the requirements of paragraph (3), the State may propose to use, for a transitional period of not more than two years, a transitional statewide set of yearly assessments, including at least mathematics, and reading or language arts, in one grade in each school, that measure the performance of complex skills and challenging subject matter.

"(ii) Each State using the transitional assessments described in clause (i) shall develop benchmarks of progress toward the development of assessments that meet the requirements of paragraph (3), including periodic updates.

"(B)(i) The Secretary may extend for two additional years the use of the transitional assessments described in subparagraph (A) upon the request of a State and a showing of substantial progress toward meeting the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (3), particularly paragraph (3)(C).

"(ii) A State that is denied the two-year extension or renewal under clause (i) or is granted such an extension or renewal, but after two additional years does not have State content standards and State student performance standards that meet the requirements of paragraph (1) or assessments that meet the requirements of paragraph (3), shall adopt a set of such standards and aligned assessments, such as those contained in other State plans the Secretary has approved.

"(C) For any year during which a State is using transitional assessments the State shall devise a procedure for identifying local educational agencies under subsections (c)(3) and (c)(7) of section 1118 and schools under subsections (b)(1) and (b)(6) of section 1118 that relies on accurate information about the academic progress of each such local educational agency and school.

"(c) OTHER PROVISIONS TO SUPPORT TEACHING AND LEARNING.—Each State plan shall contain assurances that—

"(1) the State educational agency will implement a system of school support teams under section 1119(b), including provision of necessary professional development for those teams;

"(2) the State educational agency will provide the least restrictive and burdensome regulations for local educational agencies and individual schools participating in a program assisted under this part;

"(3) the State educational agency will fulfill its local educational agency and school improvement responsibilities under section 1118; and

"(4) the State educational agency will encourage the use of funds from other Federal, State, and local sources for schoolwide reform in schoolwide programs under section 1114.

"(d) PEER REVIEW AND SECRETARIAL APPROVAL.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall—

"(A) establish a peer review process to assist in the review and recommendations for revision of State plans;

"(B) following an initial peer review, approve a State plan the Secretary determines meets the requirements of subsections (b) and (c);

"(C) if the Secretary determines that the State plan does not meet the requirements of subsection (b) or (c), immediately notify the State of that determination and the reasons for such determination;

"(D) not finally disapprove a State's plan before offering the State an opportunity to revise its plan and provide technical assistance to assist the State to meet the requirements of subsections (b) and (c); and

"(E) not require a State, as a condition of approval of the State plan, to include in, or delete from, such plan one or more specific elements of the State's content standards or to use specific assessment instruments or items.

"(2) WITHHOLDING.—The Secretary may withhold funds for State administration and activities under section 1119 until the Secretary determines that the State plan meets the requirements of this section.

"(e) DURATION OF THE PLAN.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each State plan shall—

"(A) remain in effect for the duration of the State's participation under this part; and

"(B) be periodically reviewed and revised by the State, as necessary, to reflect changes in the State's strategies and programs under this part.

"(2) ADDITIONAL INFORMATION.—If the State makes significant changes in its plan, such as the adoption of new State content standards and State student performance standards, new assessments, or a new definition of adequate progress, the State shall submit such information to the Secretary.

"(f) SPECIAL RULE.—If the aggregate State expenditure by a State educational agency for the operation of elementary and secondary education programs in the State is less than such agency's aggregate Federal expenditure for the State operation of all Federal elementary and secondary education programs, then the State plan shall include assurances and specific provisions that such State will provide State expenditures for the operation of elementary and secondary education programs equal to or exceeding the level of Federal expenditures for such operation by October 1, 1998.

"SEC. 1112. LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY PLANS.

"(a) PLANS REQUIRED.—A local educational agency may receive a subgrant under this part for any fiscal year only if such agency has on file with the State educational agency a plan that is approved by the State educational agency. Such plan may be submitted as part of a consolidated plan under section 10304.

"(b) PLAN PROVISIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each local educational agency plan shall include—

"(A) a description of additional high-quality student assessments, if any, other than those described in the State plan under section 1111, that—

"(i) the local educational agency and schools served under this part will use to—

"(I) provide information to teachers, parents, and students on the progress being made toward meeting the State student performance standards described in section 1111(b)(2)(A); and

"(II) aid in instruction, in improving the performance of individual students, and in revising the local educational agency or school's instructional program to enable all children served under this part to meet the State student performance standards described in section 1111(b)(2)(A);

"(ii) will be selected and administered by teachers; and

"(iii) will be aligned with curriculum and constitute an integral part of the instructional program;

"(f) PARENTAL INFORMATION AND RESOURCE CENTERS.—In States where parental information and resource centers have been established pursuant to section 401 of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act of 1994 (to providing training, information, and support to parents and individuals who work with parents) local educational agencies and schools receiving assistance under this part shall assist parents and parent organizations by informing such parents and organizations of the existence and purpose of such centers, providing such parents and organizations with a description of the services and programs provided by such centers, advising parents on how to use such centers, and helping parents to contact such centers.

"(g) ACCESSIBILITY.—In carrying out the parental involvement requirements of this part, local educational agencies and schools, to the extent practicable, shall provide full opportunities for the participation of parents with limited-English proficiency or with disabilities, including providing information and school profiles in a language and form such parents understand.

"SEC. 1117. PARTICIPATION OF CHILDREN ENROLLED IN PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

"(a) GENERAL REQUIREMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To the extent consistent with the number of eligible children identified according to section 1115(b) in a local educational agency who are enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools, a local educational agency shall, after timely and meaningful consultation with appropriate private school officials, provide such children, on an equitable basis, special educational services or other benefits under this part.

"(2) SECULAR, NEUTRAL, NONIDEOLOGICAL.—Such educational services or other benefits, including materials and equipment, must be secular, neutral, and nonideological.

"(3) EQUITY.—Educational services and other benefits for such private school children shall be equitable in comparison to services and other benefits for public school children participating under this part.

"(4) EXPENDITURES.—Expenditures for educational services and other benefits to eligible private school children shall be equal to the proportion of funds allocated to participating school attendance areas based on the number of children from low-income families who attend private schools.

"(5) PROVISION OF SERVICES.—The local educational agency may provide such services directly or through contracts with public and private agencies, organizations, and institutions.

"(b) CONSULTATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To ensure timely and meaningful consultation, a local educational agency shall consult with appropriate private school officials during the design and development of the agency's programs under this part, on issues such as—

"(A) how the children's needs will be identified;

"(B) what services will be offered;

"(C) how and where the services will be provided; and

"(D) how the services will be assessed.

"(2) TIMING.— Such consultation shall occur before the local educational agency makes any decision that affects the opportunities of eligible private school children to participate in programs under this part.

"(3) DISCUSSION.—Such consultation shall include a discussion of service delivery mechanisms a local educational agency can use to provide equitable services to eligible private school children.

"(c) PUBLIC CONTROL OF FUNDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The control of funds provided under this part, and title to materials, equipment, and property purchased with those funds, shall be in a public agency, and a public agency shall administer such funds and property.

"(2) PROVISION OF SERVICES.—(A) The provision of services under this section shall be provided—

"(i) by employees of a public agency; or

"(ii) through contract by such public agency with an individual, association, agency, or organization.

"(B) In the provision of such services, such employee, person, association, agency, or organization shall be independent of such private school and of any religious organization, and such employment or contract shall be under the control and supervision of such public agency.

"(3) VERIFIABLE DOCUMENTATION.—An official of each private school assisted under this part shall provide to the local educational agency the verifiable documentation necessary to determine the proportionate allocation amount under subsection (a)(4) on which the provision of equitable services under this section will be based.

"(d) STANDARDS FOR A BYPASS.—If a local educational agency is prohibited by law from providing for the participation on an equitable basis of eligible children enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools or if the Secretary determines that a local educational agency has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide for such participation, as required by this section, the Secretary shall—

"(1) waive the requirements of this section for such local educational agency; and

"(2) arrange for the provision of services to such children through arrangements that shall be subject to the requirements of this section and sections 10505 and 10506.

"(e) CAPITAL EXPENSES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) From the amount appropriated for this subsection under section 1002(e) for any fiscal year, each State is eligible to receive an amount that bears the same ratio to the amount so appropriated as the number of private school children who received services under this part in the State in the most recent year for which data satisfactory to the Secretary are available bears to the number of such children in all States in that same year.

"(B) The Secretary shall reallocate any amounts allocated under subparagraph (A) that are not used by a State for the purpose of this subsection to other States on the basis of their respective needs, as determined by the Secretary.

"(2) CAPITAL EXPENSES.—(A) A local educational agency may apply to the State educational agency for payments for capital expenses consistent with this subsection.

"(B) State educational agencies shall distribute such funds under this subsection to local educational agencies based on the degree of need set forth in their respective applications for assistance under this subsection.

"(3) USES OF FUNDS.—Any funds appropriated to carry out this subsection shall be used only for capital expenses incurred to provide equitable services for private school children under this section.

"(4) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'capital expenses' means—

"(A) expenditures for noninstructional goods and services, such as the purchase, lease, or renovation of real and personal property, including mobile educational units and leasing of neutral sites or spaces;

"(B) insurance and maintenance costs;

"(C) transportation; and

"(D) other comparable goods and services.

"SEC. 1118. ASSESSMENT AND LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY AND SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT.

"(a) LOCAL REVIEW.—Each local educational agency receiving funds under this part shall—

"(1) use the State assessments described in the State plan;

"(2) use any additional measures or indicators described in the local educational agency's plan to review annually the progress of each school served under this part to determine whether the school is meeting, or making adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(i) toward enabling its students to meet the State's student performance standards described in the State plan;

"(3) publicize and disseminate to teachers and other staff, parents, students, and the community the results of the annual review under paragraph (1) of all schools served under this part in individual school performance profiles that include disaggregated results as required by section 1111(b)(3)(I); and

"(4) provide the results of the local annual review to schools so that the local educational agency can continually refine the program of instruction to help all children served under this part in those schools meet the State's student performance standards.

"(b) SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) A local educational agency shall identify for school improvement any school served under this part that—

"(i) has been in program improvement under section 1020 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as such section was in effect on the day preceding the date of enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994), for at least two consecutive school years prior to such day;

"(ii) has not made adequate progress as defined in the State's plan under section 1111(b)(2)(A)(i) for two consecutive school years, except that—

"(I) this subparagraph shall not apply to a school if almost every student in such school is meeting the State's advanced level of performance; or

"(II) in the case of a school that is not operating a schoolwide program such school may be reviewed on the progress of only those students that have been, are, or will be, served under this part; or

"(iii) has failed to meet the criteria established by the State through the State's transitional procedure under section 1111(b)(5)(C) for two consecutive years.

"(B) Before identifying a school for school improvement under paragraph (1), the local educational agency shall provide the school with an opportunity to review the school-level data, including assessment data, on which such identification is based. If the school believes that such identification for school improvement is in error, such school may provide evidence to the local educational agency to support such belief.

"(2) REQUIREMENT.—(A) Each school identified under paragraph (1) shall—

"(i) in consultation with parents, the local educational agency, and the school support team, develop or revise a school plan in ways that have the greatest likelihood of improving the performance of participating children in meeting the State's student performance standards; and

"(ii) submit the plan to the local educational agency for approval.

"(B) During the first year immediately following identification under paragraph (1), the school shall implement such school's plan.

"(3) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—For each school identified under paragraph (1), the local educational agency shall provide technical assistance as the school develops and implements such school's plan.

"(4) CORRECTIVE ACTION.—(A) The local educational agency may take corrective action at any time against a school that has been identified under paragraph (1), but, during the third year following identification under paragraph (1), shall take such action against any school that still fails to make adequate progress.

"(B)(i) Corrective actions are those, consistent with State and local law, determined and made public and disseminated by the local educational agency, which may include—

"(I) withholding funds;

"(II) an aggressive joint plan between the local educational agency and the school that addresses specific elements of student performance problems and that specifies school and local responsibilities under the plan;

"(III) interagency collaborative agreements between the school and other public agencies to provide health, counseling, and other social services needed to remove barriers to learning;

"(IV) waivers or modifications of requirements of local educational agency policy or regulation that impede the ability of the school to educate students;

"(V) revoking authority for a school to operate a schoolwide program;

"(VI) decreasing decisionmaking authority at the school level;

"(VII) making alternative governance arrangements such as the creation of a public charter school;

"(VIII) reconstituting the school staff; and

"(IX) authorizing students to transfer, including transportation costs, to other public schools served by the local educational agency.

"(ii) Notwithstanding clause (i), corrective actions taken pursuant to this part shall not include the actions described in subclauses (I), (V), (VI), (VIII), (IX) of clause (i) until the State has developed assessments that meet the requirements of paragraph (3)(E) of section 1111(b).

"(C) Prior to implementing any corrective action, the local educational agency may refrain from such corrective action to the extent that the failure to make progress can be attributed to extenuating circumstances, such as sudden and significant reductions in Federal funding in a single year, as determined by the Secretary.

"(5) STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCY RESPONSIBILITIES.—The State educational agency shall—

"(A) make assistance from school support teams and distinguished educators under section 1119 available to the schools farthest from meeting the State's student performance standards, if requested by the local educational agency or school; and

"(B) if such agency determines that a local educational agency failed to carry out the local educational agency's responsibilities under paragraphs (3) and (4), take such corrective actions that the State educational agency deems appropriate.

"(6) SPECIAL RULE.—Schools that for at least two of the three years following identification under paragraph (1) make adequate progress toward meeting the State's proficient and advanced levels of performance shall no longer need to be identified for school improvement.

"(c) STATE REVIEW AND LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY IMPROVEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A State educational agency shall—

"(A) annually review the progress of each local educational agency receiving funds under this part to determine whether the local educational agency is making adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(ii) toward meeting the State's student performance standards; and

"(B) publicize and disseminate to local educational agencies, teachers and other staff, parents, students, and the community the results of the State review, including disaggregated results, as required by section 1111(b)(3)(F).

"(2) REWARDS.—In the case of a local educational agency that for three consecutive years has met or exceeded the State's definition of adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(ii), the State may make institutional and individual rewards of the kinds described for individual schools in paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 1119(b).

"(3) IDENTIFICATION.—(A) A State educational agency shall identify for improvement any local educational agency that—

"(i) for two consecutive years, is not making adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(ii) in schools served under this part toward meeting the State's student performance standards, except that schools served by the local educational agency that are not operating schoolwide programs may be reviewed on the basis of the progress of only those students served under this part; or

"(ii) has failed to meet the criteria established by the State through its transitional procedure under section 1111(b)(5)(C) for two consecutive years.

"(B) Before identifying a local educational agency for improvement under paragraph (1), the State educational agency shall provide the local educational agency with an opportunity to review the school-level data, including assessment data, on which such identification is based. If the local educational agency believes that such identification for improvement is in error, such local educational agency may provide evidence to the State educational agency to support such belief.

"(4) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY REVISIONS.—Each local educational agency identified under paragraph (3) shall, in consultation with schools, parents, and educational experts, revise its local educational agency plan under section 1112 in ways that have the greatest likelihood of improving the performance of schools served by the local educational agency in meeting the State's student performance standards.

"(5) STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCY RESPONSIBILITIES.—For each local educational agency identified under paragraph (3), the State educational agency shall—

"(A) provide technical assistance to better enable the local educational agency to develop and implement the local educational agency's revised plan and work with schools needing improvement; and

"(B) make available to the local educational agencies farthest from meeting the State's standards, if requested, assistance from school support teams and distinguished educators under section 1119.

"(6) CORRECTIVE ACTION.—(A) The State educational agency may take corrective action at any time against a local educational agency that has been identified under paragraph (3), but, during the fourth year following identification under paragraph (3), shall take such action against any local educational agency that still fails to make adequate progress.

"(B)(i) Corrective actions are those, consistent with State law, determined and made public and disseminated by the State educational agency, which may include—

"(I) the withholding of funds;

"(II) an aggressive joint plan between the State and local educational agency that addresses specific elements of student performance problems and that specifies State and local responsibilities under the plan;

"(III) interagency collaborative agreements between the local educational agency and other public agencies to provide health, pupil services, and other social services needed to remove barriers to learning;

"(IV) waivers or modification of requirements of State law or regulation (in States in which such waivers are permitted) that impede the ability of a local educational agency to educate students;

"(V) reconstitution of school district personnel;

"(VI) appointment by the State educational agency of a representative to implement, in conjunction with the local educational agency, a program improvement plan;

"(VII) removal of particular schools from the jurisdiction of the local educational agency and establishment of alternative arrangements for the public governance and supervision of such schools, including contracts with private management companies;

"(VIII) authorizing students to transfer to another public school, including the cost of transportation; and

"(IX) contracting out the management of troubled schools to private management firms.

"(ii) Notwithstanding clause (i), corrective actions taken pursuant to this part shall not include the actions described in subclauses (I), (V), and (VII) of clause (i) until the State has developed assessments that meet the requirements of paragraph (3)(E) of section 1111(b).

"(C) Prior to implementing any corrective action, the State educational agency shall provide due process, including a hearing, to any local educational agency identified under paragraph (3) and may refrain from such corrective action to the extent that the failure to make progress can be attributed to such extenuating circumstances as determined by the Secretary.

"(7) SPECIAL RULE.—Local educational agencies that for at least two of the three years following identification under paragraph (3) make adequate progress toward meeting the State's standards no longer need to be identified for local educational agency improvement.

"(d) OTHER ACCOUNTABILITY SYSTEMS.—If a State has developed an accountability system for all children that, in the Secretary's judgment, is as rigorous as the system required by this section and can serve as basis for the accountability of programs under this part, then the Secretary may deem such system as meeting the requirements of this section.

"(e) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter or otherwise affect the rights, remedies, and procedures afforded school or school district employees under Federal, State, or local laws (including applicable regulations or court orders) or under the terms of collective bargaining agreements, memoranda of understanding, or other agreements between such employees and their employers.

"SEC. 1119. STATE ASSISTANCE FOR SCHOOLS SUPPORT AND IMPROVEMENT.

"(a) SYSTEM FOR SUPPORT.—Each State educational agency shall establish a statewide system of intensive and sustained support and improvement for schools receiving funds under this title, including schoolwide programs and schools in need of program improvement.

"(1) SCHOOL SUPPORT TEAMS.—

"(A) Each State, in consultation with local educational agencies and schools, shall establish a system of school support teams to provide information and assistance to schoolwide programs, or a school in which the number of students in poverty is equal to or greater than 75 percent of the total number of students enrolled in such school and such school is identified as in need of improvement under section 1118(b)(1).

"(B) Each such team shall be composed of persons, including teachers, pupil services personnel, representatives of organizations knowledgeable about successful schoolwide projects or comprehensive school reform, and other persons who are knowledgeable about research and practice on teaching and learning, particularly about strategies for improving the educational opportunities for eligible children, such as representatives of institutions of higher education, regional educational laboratories or research centers, and outside consultant groups.

"(C) A school support team shall work cooperatively with each school and make recommendations as the school develops its schoolwide program plan or school improvement plan, review each plan, and make recommendations to the school and the local educational agency.

"(D) During the operation of the schoolwide program or during school improvement activities, a school support team shall—

"(i) periodically review the progress of the school in enabling children in the school to meet the State's performance standards under this part;

"(ii) identify problems in the design and operation of the instructional program; and

"(iii) make recommendations for improvement to the school and the local educational agency.

"(E) Funds made available for State administration and, at the discretion of the local educational agency, funds available to local educational agencies under this part may be used to pay the costs of the school support teams.

"(2) DISTINGUISHED SCHOOLS.—(A) Each State shall designate as a distinguished school—

"(i) any school served under this part that, for three consecutive years, has exceeded the State's definition of adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(i); and

"(ii) any school in which almost every student has met the State's advanced level of performance.

"(B)(i) A State shall use funds available under section 1701(c) to recognize distinguished schools, including making monetary awards.

"(ii) Funds awarded to a distinguished school may be used by the school to further the school's educational program under this part, provide additional incentives for continued success, and reward individuals or groups in the school for past performance.

"(C) A local educational agency may also recognize the success of a distinguished school by providing additional institutional and individual rewards, such as greater decisionmaking authority at the school building level, increased access to resources or supplemental services such as summer programs that may be used to sustain or increase success, additional professional development opportunities, opportunities to participate in special projects, and individual financial bonuses.

"(D) Schools designated as distinguished schools under such subparagraph (A) may serve as models and provide additional assistance to other schools served under this part, especially schoolwide programs and schools in school improvement, that are not making adequate progress.

"(3) DISTINGUISHED EDUCATORS.—

"(A) In order to provide assistance to schools and local educational agencies identified as needing improvement and schools participating in schoolwide programs, each State, in consultation with local educational agencies and using funds available under section 1701(c), shall establish a corps of distinguished educators.

"(B) When possible, distinguished educators shall be chosen from schools served under this part that have been especially successful in enabling children to meet or make outstanding progress toward meeting the State's student performance standards, such as the schools described in paragraph (2).

"(C) Distinguished educators shall provide, as part of the statewide system, intensive and sustained assistance to the schools and local educational agencies furthest from meeting the State's student performance standards and to schoolwide programs as such programs develop and implement their plans, including participation in the support teams described in paragraph (1).

"(c) IMPLEMENTATION.—In order to implement this section, funds made available under section 1701(c) may be used by a State for release time for teachers and administrators, travel, training, and other related costs.

"(d) ALTERNATIVES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The State may devise alternative or additional approaches to providing the assistance described in paragraphs (1) and (3) of subsection (b), such as providing assistance through institutions of higher education and educational service agencies or other local consortia and may use funds authorized in section 1701(c) for such approaches.

"(2) INAPPLICABILITY.—Paragraphs (1) and (3) of subsection (b) shall not apply to a State educational agency if such agency determines that a local educational agency or school is receiving adequate technical assistance from a source other than the State educational agency.

"SEC. 1120. FISCAL REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT.—A local educational agency may receive funds under this part for any fiscal year only if the State educational agency finds that the local educational agency has maintained its fiscal effort in accordance with section 10501 of this Act.

"(b) FEDERAL FUNDS TO SUPPLEMENT, NOT SUPPLANT, NON-FEDERAL FUNDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a State or local educational agency shall use funds received under this part only to supplement the amount of funds that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made available from non-Federal sources for the education of pupils participating in programs assisted under this part, and not to supplant such funds.

"(B) For the purpose of complying with subparagraph (A), a State or local educational agency may exclude supplemental State and local funds expended in any eligible school attendance area or school for programs that meet the requirements of section 1114 or 1115.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE.—No local educational agency shall be required to provide services under this part through a particular instructional method or in a particular instructional setting in order to demonstrate such agency's compliance with paragraph (1).

"(c) COMPARABILITY OF SERVICES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) Except as provided in paragraphs (4) and (5), a local educational agency may receive funds under this part only if State and local funds will be used in schools served under this part to provide services that, taken as a whole, are at least comparable to services in schools that are not receiving funds under this part.

"(B) If the local educational agency is serving all of such agency's schools under this part, such agency may receive funds under this part only if such agency will use State and local funds to provide services that, taken as a whole, are substantially comparable in each school.

"(C) A local educational agency may meet the requirements of subparagraphs (A) and (B) on a grade-span by grade-span basis or a school-by-school basis.

"(2) WRITTEN ASSURANCE.—(A) A local educational agency shall be considered to have met the requirements of paragraph (1) if such agency has filed with the State educational agency a written assurance that such agency has established and implemented—

"(i) a local educational agency-wide salary schedule;

"(ii) a policy to ensure equivalence among schools in teachers, administrators, and other staff; and

"(iii) a policy to ensure equivalence among schools in the provision of curriculum materials and instructional supplies.

"(B) Unpredictable changes in student enrollment or personnel assignments which occur after the beginning of a school year shall not be included as a factor in determining comparability of services.

"(C) A local educational agency need not include unpredictable changes in student enrollment or personnel assignments that occur after the beginning of a school year in determining comparability of services under this subsection.

"(3) PROCEDURES AND RECORDS.—Each local educational agency shall—

"(A) develop procedures for compliance with this subsection; and

"(B) maintain records that are updated biennially documenting such agency's compliance with this subsection.

"(4) INAPPLICABILITY.—This subsection shall not apply to a local educational agency that does not have more than one building for each grade span.

"(5) COMPLIANCE.—For the purpose of determining compliance with paragraph (1), a local educational agency may exclude State and local funds expended for—

"(A) bilingual education for children of limited-English proficiency; and

"(B) excessive costs of providing services to children with disabilities as determined by the local educational agency.

"Subpart 2—Allocations

"SEC. 1121. GRANTS FOR THE OUTLYING AREAS AND THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

"(a) RESERVATION OF FUNDS.—From the amount appropriated for payments to States for any fiscal year under section 1002(a), the Secretary shall reserve a total of 1 percent to provide assistance to—

"(1) the outlying areas on the basis of their respective need for such assistance according to such criteria as the Secretary determines will best carry out the purpose of this part; and

"(2) the Secretary of the Interior in the amount necessary to make payments pursuant to subsection (c).

"(b) ASSISTANCE TO THE OUTLYING AREAS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—From amounts made available under subsection (a)(1) in each fiscal year the Secretary shall make grants to local educational agencies in the outlying areas in accordance with recommendations from the Pacific Regional Educational Laboratory which shall conduct a competition for such grants.

"(2) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—The Secretary shall provide 5 percent of amounts made available for grants under this paragraph in each fiscal year to the Pacific Regional Educational Laboratory to pay the administrative costs of such laboratory with respect to the activities under this subsection.

"(c) ALLOTMENT TO THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount allotted for payments to the Secretary of the Interior under subsection (a)(2) for any fiscal year shall be, as determined pursuant to criteria established by the Secretary, the amount necessary to meet the special educational needs of—

"(A) Indian children on reservations served by elementary and secondary schools for Indian children operated or supported by the Department of the Interior; and

"(B) out-of-State Indian children in elementary and secondary schools in local educational agencies under special contracts with the Department of the Interior.

"(2) PAYMENTS.—From the amount allotted for payments to the Secretary of the Interior under subsection (a)(2), the Secretary of the Interior shall make payments to local educational agencies, upon such terms as the Secretary determines will best carry out the purposes of this part, with respect to out-of-State Indian children described in paragraph (1). The amount of such payment may not exceed, for each such child, the greater of—

"(A) 40 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the State in which the agency is located; or

"(B) 46 percent of such expenditure in the United States.

"(a) ADJUSTMENTS WHERE NECESSITATED BY APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If the sums made available under this part for any fiscal year are insufficient to pay the full amounts that all local educational agencies in all States are eligible to receive under section 1123 for such year, the Secretary first shall ratably reduce the allocations to such local educational agencies for such year.

"(2) ADDITIONAL FUNDS.—If additional funds become available for making payments under section 1123 for such fiscal year, allocations that were reduced under paragraph (1) shall be increased on the same basis as such allocations were reduced.

"(b) HOLD-HARMLESS AMOUNTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the total amount made available to each State under section 1123—

"(A) for fiscal year 1995, shall not be less than 100 percent of the total amount such State received under sections 1005 and 1006 (as such sections were in existence on the day preceding the date of enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994) for fiscal year 1994;

"(B) for fiscal year 1996, shall not be less than 90 percent of the total amount such State received under section 1123 for fiscal year 1995; and

"(C) for fiscal year 1997 and each succeeding fiscal year, shall not be less than 85 percent of the total amount such State received in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made.

"(2) RATABLE REDUCTIONS.—(A) If the sums made available under this part for any fiscal year are insufficient to pay the full amounts that all States are eligible to receive under paragraph (1) for such year, the Secretary shall ratably reduce such amounts for such year.

"(B) If additional funds become available for making payments under paragraph (1) for such fiscal year, amounts that were reduced under subparagraph (A) shall be increased on the same basis as such amounts reduced.

"(c) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this section and section 1123, the term State means each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"SEC. 1123. GRANTS TO STATES.

"(a) AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) In any case in which the Secretary determines that satisfactory data for local educational agencies are available to carry out determinations under paragraph (2), the grant which a State is eligible to receive under this subpart for a fiscal year shall be the aggregate amount of grants for all local educational agencies in that State, as determined under paragraph (2).

"(B) In any case in which the Secretary determines that satisfactory data for local educational agencies are not available to carry out determinations under paragraph (2), the grant which a State is eligible to receive for a fiscal year shall be the aggregate amounts of grants for all counties in that State, as determined under paragraph (2).

"(2) GRANTS FOR STATES.—(A)(i) The grant for a local educational agency shall be determined by multiplying the number of children determined under subsection (c)(2) by 40 percent of the amount determined under the next sentence, multiplying such product by the effort factor described in clause (ii) and multiplying such product by the equity factor described in clause (iii). The amount determined under this sentence shall be the average per pupil expenditure in the State except that (I) if the average per pupil expenditure in the State is less than 85 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States, such amount shall be 85 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States, or (II) if the average per pupil expenditure in the State is more than 115 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States, such amount shall be 115 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States.

"(ii)(I) Except as provided in subclause (II), the effort factor for a local educational agency shall be determined in accordance with the succeeding sentence, except that such factor shall not be less than .95 nor more than 1.05. The effort factor determined under this sentence shall be a fraction the numerator of which is the product of the average per pupil expenditure for kindergarten through 12th grade education in the State served by the local educational agency multiplied by the per capita income in the United States and the denominator of which is the product of the per capita income in such State multiplied by the average per pupil expenditure for kindergarten through 12th grade education in the United States.

"(II) The effort factor for the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall be equal to the lowest effort factor calculated under subclause (I) for any State.

"(iii)(I) Except as provided in subclause (II), the equalization factor for a local educational agency shall be determined in accordance with the succeeding sentence. The equalization factor determined under this sentence shall be calculated as follows: First, calculate the difference (expressed as a positive amount) between the average per pupil expenditure in the State served by the local educational agency and the average per pupil expenditure in each local educational agency in the State and multiply such difference by the total student enrollment for such agency, except that children from low-income families shall be multiplied by a factor of 1.4 to calculate such enrollment. Second, add the products under the preceding sentence for each local educational agency in such State and divide such sum by the total student enrollment of such State, except that children from low-income families shall be multiplied by a factor of 1.4 to calculate such enrollment. Third, divide the quotient under the preceding sentence by the average per pupil expenditure in such State. The equalization factor shall be equal to 1 minus the amount determined in the previous sentence.

"(II) The equalization factor for a local educational agency serving a State that meets the disparity standard described in section 222.63 of title 34, Code of Federal Regulations (as such section was in effect on the day preceding the date of enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994) shall have a maximum coefficient of variation of .10.

"(I) For fiscal year 1995, no State's allocation shall be increased by an amount greater than 2 percent or reduced by an amount greater than 2 percent of the amount to which it would otherwise be entitled when the provisions of clause (iii) are multiplied according to the provisions of paragraph (2) of this section.

"(II) For fiscal year 1996, no State's allocation shall be increased by an amount greater than 4 percent or reduced by an amount greater than 4 percent of the amount to which it would otherwise be entitled when the provisions of clause (iii) are multiplied according to the provisions of paragraph (2) of this section.

"(III) For fiscal year 1997, no State's allocation shall be increased by an amount greater than 6 percent or reduced by an amount greater than 6 percent of the amount to which it would otherwise be entitled when the provisions of clause (iii) are multiplied according to the provisions of paragraph (2) of this section.

"(B) For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall determine the percentage which the average per pupil expenditure in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is of the lowest average per pupil expenditure of any of the 50 States. The grant which the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall be eligible to receive under this subpart for a fiscal year shall be determined by multiplying the product of the effort factor for the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico under subparagraph (A)(ii)(II) for such year multiplied by the equity factor for the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico under subparagraph (A)(iii)(II)(aa) for such year by the amount arrived at by multiplying the number of children counted under subsection (c) for the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico by the product of—

"(i) the percentage determined under the preceding sentence for such year; and

"(ii) 34 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States for such year.

"(b) MINIMUM NUMBER OF CHILDREN TO QUALIFY.—The children served by a local educational agency shall be counted for a fiscal year under this subpart only if such agency meets the following requirements with respect to the number of children counted under subsection (c)(1):

"(1) In any case (except as provided in paragraph (3)) in which the Secretary determines that satisfactory data for the purpose of this subsection as to the number of such children are available on a school district basis, the number of such children in the school district of such local educational agency shall be at least 10.

"(2) In any other case, except as provided in paragraph (3), the number of such children in the county which includes such local educational agency's school district shall be at least 10.

"(3) In any case in which a county includes a part of the school district of the local educational agency concerned and the Secretary has not determined that satisfactory data for the purpose of this subsection are available on a school district basis for all the local educational agencies or all the counties into which the school district of the local educational agency concerned extends, the eligibility requirement with respect to the number of such children for such local educational agency shall be determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary for the purposes of this subsection.

"(c) DETERMINATION OF WEIGHTED NUMBER OF CHILDREN.—

"(1) CHILDREN TO BE COUNTED.—(A) The number of children to be counted for purposes of this section is the aggregate of—

"(i) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of the local educational agency from families below the poverty level; and

"(ii) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of such agency living in institutions for neglected or delinquent children (other than such institutions operated by the United States) but not counted pursuant to subpart 3 of part E for the purposes of a grant to a State agency, or being supported in foster homes with public funds.

"(B) For the purposes of this section, the Secretary shall determine the number of children counted under subparagraph (A) on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available from the Department of Commerce for local educational agencies (or, if such data are not available for such agencies, for counties); and in determining the families which are below the poverty level, the Secretary shall utilize the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census.

"(2) DETERMINATION OF NUMBER OF CHILDREN.—(A) The number of children to be determined for purposes of this paragraph shall be the number of children counted under paragraph (1) multiplied by the weighting factor for the local educational agency. The weighting factor shall be established on the basis of the percentage that the number of children counted under paragraph (1) represents of the total population aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the local educational agency or the number of such children. Weighted pupil counts shall be calculated based upon both percentage and number and the larger of the two counts shall be used in calculating grants for each local educational agency. Except as provided in subparagraph (B), weighting factors shall be assigned according to the following scale: if the percentage is greater than 0 but less than 12.20, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for all children counted under paragraph (1); if the percentage is greater than 12.20 but less than 17.70, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 12.20 percent of the total school age population and 1.10 for children counted under paragraph (1) in excess of 12.20 percent of the total school age population; if the percentage is greater than 17.70 percent but less than 22.80 percent, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 12.20 percent of the total school age population, 1.10 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 5.50 percent of the total school age population, and 1.20 for children counted under paragraph (1) in excess of 17.70 percent of the total school age population; if the percentage is greater than 22.80 percent but less than 29.70 percent, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 12.20 percent of the total school age population, 1.10 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 5.50 percent of the total school age population, 1.20 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 5.10 percent of the total school age population, and 1.30 for children counted under paragraph (1) in excess of 22.80 percent of the total school age population; and if the percentage is greater than 29.70, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 12.20 percent of the total school age population, 1.10 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 5.50 percent of the total school age population, 1.20 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 5.10 percent of the total school age population, 1.30 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 6.90 percent of the total school age population, and 1.40 for children counted under paragraph (1) in excess of 29.70 percent of the total school age population. Separately, if the number of children counted under paragraph (1) is greater than 0 but less than 1917, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for all children counted under paragraph (1); if the number is greater than 1917 but less than 5,938, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 1917, and 1.075 for children counted under paragraph (1) in excess of 1917; if the number is greater than 5,938 but less than 20,199, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 1917, 1.075 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 4,021, and 1.150 for children counted under paragraph (1) in excess of 5,938; if the number is greater than 20,199 but less than 77,999 then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 1917, 1.075 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 4,021, 1.150 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 14,261, and 1.225 for children counted under paragraph (1) in excess of 20,199; and if the number is greater than 77,999, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 1917, 1.075 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 4,021, 1.150 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 14,261, 1.225 for a number of children counted under paragraph (1) equal to 57,800 and 1.30 for children counted under paragraph (1) in excess of 77,999. For the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the weighting factor shall be not greater than 1.15.

“(1) MINIMUM.—Notwithstanding subsections (a)(2)(A)(iv) and (e), for any fiscal year the aggregate amount allotted for all local educational agencies within a State may not be less than one-quarter of 1 percent of the total amount available for such fiscal year under this section.

“(2) SPECIAL RULE.—Notwithstanding subsections (a)(2)(A)(iv) and (e), a State shall not be allotted in any fiscal year less than 125 percent of the amount that the State would have received under this section in such fiscal year if the provisions of paragraph (1) were not applied.

“(e) SPECIAL RULE.—No State shall receive a grant under this section for fiscal year 1995 in an amount that exceeds 115 percent of the amount that would have been allocated to such State for such fiscal year under subpart 1 of part A of chapter 1 of title I (as such subpart was in effect on the day preceding the date of enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994).

“(a) IN GENERAL.—

“(1) ELIGIBILITY.—No local educational agency shall be eligible for funds under this part unless the number of children counted under subsection (b)(1) for such agency is at least 10 and equal to 5 percent or greater of the number of all children served by such agency.

“(2) HOLD HARMLESS.—(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), each local educational agency shall receive an amount under this part for fiscal years 1995 and 1996 that is at least equal to 85 percent of the amount such agency received under this part (or for fiscal year 1994 only, such part's predecessor authority) in the preceding fiscal year, except that if such agency is not eligible for assistance under paragraph (1) such agency shall only receive the amount provided for under this paragraph for fiscal year 1995.

“(B)(i) If the sums made available under this part for any fiscal year are insufficient to pay the full amounts that all local educational agencies in all States are eligible to receive under subparagraph (A) for such year, the State educational agency shall ratably reduce the allocations to such local educational agencies for such year.

“(ii) If additional funds become available for making payments under subparagraph (A) for such fiscal year, allocations that were reduced under subparagraph (A) shall be increased on the same basis as such allocations were reduced.

“(3) STATE RESERVE.—(A) For each fiscal year each State may reserve not more than 2 percent of the funds such State receives to carry out this part to award grants to local educational agencies that—

“(i) are not eligible for assistance under paragraph (1); and

“(ii) serve a school attendance area for which the percentage of children counted under subsection (b)(1) that are enrolled in the schools in such area exceeds—

“(I) the percentage of such children in the State; or “(II) 25 percent.

“(B) The total amount of funds awarded to each local educational agency receiving a grant under this paragraph when added to funds made available under paragraph (2) shall not exceed—

“(i) for fiscal year 1995, the amount such agency received under this part's predecessor authority in the preceding fiscal year; and

“(ii) for fiscal year 1996 and each succeeding fiscal year, the average amount received per child under this part in the State multiplied by the number of children counted under subsection (b)(1) in such agency's school attendance areas described in subparagraph (A)(ii).

“(C) Each State awarding grants under this paragraph shall distribute such grants to local educational agencies in rank order based on the percentage of children from low-income families in each local educational agency's school attendance area described in subparagraph (A)(ii).

“(D) Each local educational agency receiving a grant under this paragraph only shall use such grants funds to serve school attendance areas described in subparagraph (A)(ii).

“(E) In order to receive a grant under this paragraph a local educational agency shall provide an assurance to the State educational agency serving such local educational agency that such local educational agency has not modified the student assignment practices of such local educational agency so as to increase the percentage of children from low-income families in each school for which assistance is sought under this paragraph.

“(b) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY ALLOCATIONS.—

“(1) CHILDREN TO BE COUNTED.—(A) The number of children counted for purposes of this section is the aggregate of—

“(i) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of the local educational agency from families below the poverty level; and

“(ii) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of such agency living in institutions for neglected or delinquent children (other than such institutions operated by the United States) but not counted pursuant to subpart 3 of part E for the purposes of a grant to a State agency, or being supported in foster homes with public funds.

“(B) In determining the number of children eligible to be counted under subparagraph (A), a State educational agency shall use for each local educational agency served by such State educational agency—

“(i) data from the Bureau of the Census regarding the number of children determined in accordance with section 1123(c)(1)(B);

“(ii) data based on the sum of—

“(I) the number of children from families receiving aid to families with dependent children under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act; and

“(II) the number of children with limited-English proficiency served by such agency divided by three; or

“(iii) data based on other poverty criteria, including combinations of the data described in clauses (i) and (ii) and combinations of the data described in either such clause and other data, that the State educational agency deems appropriate and the Secretary approves, adjusted to be equivalent in proportion to the number of children determined in accordance with section 1123(c)(1)(B) in the State, except that the State educational agency may submit to the Secretary for approval alternative data that more accurately target poverty.

“(2) ABSORPTION.—In determining the number of children to be counted under this paragraph for each local educational agency, the State educational agency shall subtract 1 percent of the total number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, served by such local educational agency from the number of children counted under paragraph (1) for such local educational agency.

“(3) WEIGHTED CHILDREN.—From funds made available under section 1123, each State educational agency shall allocate such funds to local educational agencies in the State on the basis of the number of children counted under paragraph (2) for a local educational agency multiplied by the weighting factor for the local educational agency. The weighting factor shall be established on the basis of the percentage that the number of children counted under paragraph (2) represents of the total population aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the local educational agency or the number of such children. Weighted pupil counts shall be calculated based upon both percentage and number and the larger of the two counts shall be used in calculating grants for each local educational agency. Weighting factors shall be assigned according to the following scale, except that a State educational agency may submit to the Secretary for approval State-specific quintiles for use in the following percentages or numbers for the State if the use of such quintiles more accurately targets poverty: if the percentage is greater than 0 but less than 14.265, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for all children counted under paragraph (2); if the percentage is greater than 14.265 but less than 21.553, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population and 1.150 for children counted under paragraph (2) in excess of 14.265 percent of the total school age population; if the percentage is greater than 21.553 percent but less than 29.223 percent, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population, 1.150 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 7.288 percent of the total school age population, and 1.300 for children counted under paragraph (2) in excess of 21.553 percent of the total school age population; if the percentage is greater than 29.223 percent but less than 36.538 percent, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population, 1.150 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 7.288 percent of the total school age population, 1.30 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 7.67 percent of the total school age population, and 1.450 for children counted under paragraph (2) in excess of 29.223 percent of the total school age population; and if the percentage is greater than 36.538, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population, 1.150 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 7.288 percent of the total school age population, 1.300 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 7.67 percent of the total school age population, 1.450 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 7.315 percent of the total school age population, and 1.600 for children counted under paragraph (2) in excess of 36.538 percent of the total school age population. Separately, if the number of children counted under paragraph (2) is greater than 0 but less than 575, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for all children counted under paragraph (2); if the number is greater than 575 but less than 1,870, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 575, and 1.10 for children counted under paragraph (2) in excess of 575; if the number is greater than 1,870 but less than 6,910, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 575, 1.10 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 1,295, and 1.20 for children counted under paragraph (2) in excess of 1,870; if the number is greater than 6,910 but less than 42,000 then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 575, 1.10 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 1,295, 1.20 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 5,040, and 1.30 for children counted under paragraph (2) in excess of 6,910; and if the number is greater than 42,000, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 575, 1.10 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 1,295, 1.20 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 5,040, 1.30 for a number of children counted under paragraph (2) equal to 35,090 and 1.40 for children counted under paragraph (2) in excess of 42,000.

''(4) GEOGRAPHIC CIRCUMSTANCES.—In the case of local educational agencies which serve in whole or in part the same geographical area, and in the case of a local educational agency which provides free public education for a substantial number of children who reside in the school district of another local educational agency, the State educational agency may allocate the amount of the grants for those local educational agencies among those local educational agencies in such manner as the State educational agency determines will best carry out the purposes of this part.

''(5) SPECIAL ALLOCATION PROCEDURES.—Upon determination by the State educational agency that a local educational agency in the State is unable or unwilling to provide for the special educational needs of children described in clause (ii) of section 1123(c)(1)(A), who are living in institutions for neglected or delinquent children, the State educational agency shall, if the State educational agency assumes responsibility for the special educational needs of such children, be eligible to receive the portion of the allocation to such local educational agency which is attributable to such neglected or delinquent children, but if the State educational agency does not assume such responsibility, any other State or local public agency, as determined by regulations established by the Secretary, which does assume such responsibility, shall be eligible to receive such portion of the allocation.

''(6) SPECIAL RULE.—A local educational agency may reserve not more than 2 percent of the funds such agency receives under this part for each fiscal year to provide services at the discretion of the highest administrative official (superintendent) of such agency and consistent with the purposes of this title to a school, if the school is within two rank orders described in section 1113(c) of the lowest such rank ordered school served under this part.

"PART H—EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

"SEC. 1801. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

"(1) while low-income students have made significant gains with respect to educational achievement and attainment, considerable gaps still persist for these students in comparison to those from more affluent socio-economic backgrounds;

"(2) our Nation has a compelling interest in assuring that all children receive a high quality education;

"(3) new methods and experiments to revitalize educational achievement and opportunities of low-income individuals must be a part of any comprehensive solution to the problems in our Nation's educational system;

"(4) preliminary research shows that same gender classes and schools may produce promising academic and behavioral improvements in both sexes for low-income, educationally disadvantaged students;

"(5) extensive data on same gender classes and schools are needed to determine whether same gender classes and schools are closely tailored to achieving the compelling government interest in assuring that all children are educated to the best of their ability;

"(6) in recent years efforts to experiment with same gender classes and schools have been inhibited by lawsuits and threats of lawsuits by private groups as well as governmental entities; and

"(7) there is a compelling government interest in granting the Secretary authority to insulate a limited number of local educational agencies and schools which are experimenting with same gender classes for a limited period of time from certain law suits under title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, section 204 of the Education Amendments of 1974, section 1979 of the Revised Statutes (42 U.S.C. 1983), or any other law prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sex, in order to collect data on the effectiveness of such classes in educating children from low-income, educationally disadvantaged backgrounds.

"(b) PURPOSES.—It is the purpose of this part—

"(1) to give the Secretary discretion to allow experimentation with same gender classes for low-income, educationally disadvantaged students;

"(2) to determine whether same gender classes make a difference in the educational achievement and opportunities of low-income, educationally disadvantaged individuals; and

"(3) to involve parents in the educational options and choices of their children.

"(C) gives parents the option of choosing to send their child to a same gender class or to a co-educational class;

"(D) admits students on the basis of a lottery, if more students apply for admission to the same gender classes than can be accommodated;

"(E) has a program in which a member of the community is asked to volunteer such member's time in classes of children of the same gender as the member; and

"(F) operates in pursuit of improving achievement among all children based on a specific set of educational objectives determined by the local educational agency applying for a grant under this part, in conjunction with the educational opportunity advisory board established under section 1803(c) and agreed to by the Secretary; and

"(c) EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY ADVISORY BOARD.—Each local educational agency receiving a waiver under this part shall establish an educational opportunity advisory board. Such advisory board shall be composed of school administrators, parents, teachers, local government officials and volunteers involved with an educational opportunity school. "TITLE II—IMPROVING TEACHING AND LEARNING

"PART A—DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

"SEC. 2101. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds as follows:

"(1) Reaching the third National Education Goal (all students will demonstrate mastery of challenging subject matter in the core academic subjects) and the fifth National Education Goal (United States students will become first in the world in mathematics and science achievement) requires a comprehensive educational reform strategy that involves parents, schools, government, communities, and other public and private organizations at all levels.

"(2) A crucial component of the strategy for achieving these two goals is ensuring, through sustained and intensive high-quality professional development, that all teachers can provide challenging learning experiences in the core academic subjects for their students.

"(3) The potential positive impact of high-quality professional development is underscored by recent research findings that—

"(A) professional development must be focused on teaching and learning in order to change the opportunities of all students to achieve higher standards;

"(B) effective professional development focuses on discipline-based knowledge and effective subject-specific pedagogical skills, involves teams of teachers, administrators, and pupil services personnel in a school and, through professional networks of teachers, teacher educators, administrators, pupil services personnel, and parents is interactive and collaborative, motivates by its intrinsic content and relationship to practice, builds on experience and learning-by-doing, and becomes incorporated into the everyday life of the school;

"(C) professional development can dramatically improve classroom instruction and learning when teachers, administrators, pupil services personnel, and parents are partners in the development and implementation of such professional development; and

"(D) new and innovative strategies for teaching to high standards will require time for teachers, outside of the time spent teaching, for instruction, practice, and collegial collaboration.

"(4) Special attention must be given in professional development activities to ensure that education professionals are knowledgeable of, and make use of, strategies for serving populations that historically have lacked access to equal opportunities for advanced learning and career advancement.

"(5) Professional development activities must prepare teachers, pupil services personnel, paraprofessionals and other staff in effective prevention and intervention strategies to—

"(A) alleviate the need, and assure appropriate referral, for special education services; and

"(B) prepare staff to work collaboratively to educate students with disabilities placed into general education settings, consistent with such student's individualized education program.

"(6) Professional development activities, designed in cooperation with parents, that focus on the complex social, emotional and mental health needs of children which may impede learning, can help teachers, administrators, and pupil services personnel assist children in overcoming barriers to academic success.

"(7) Professional development is often a victim of budget reductions in fiscally difficult times.

"(8) There are few incentives or sanctions operating to encourage teachers and administrators to work to prepare themselves to be more effective or to participate in challenging and effective professional development activities.

"(9) Parental involvement is an important aspect of school reform and improvement. There is a need for special attention to ensure the effective involvement of parents in the education of their children. Professional development should include methods and strategies to better prepare teachers and administrators in involving parents. Programs are needed to provide parents the training and development necessary to enable parents to participate fully and effectively in their children's education.

"(10) The Federal Government has a vital role in helping to make sustained and intensive high-quality professional development in the core academic subjects become an integral part of the elementary and secondary education system.

"SEC. 2102. PURPOSES.

"It is the purpose of this part—

"SEC. 2114. NATIONAL TEACHER TRAINING PROJECT.

"(a) SHORT TITLE; FINDINGS; DEFINITIONS.—

"(1) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the 'National Teacher Training Project Act of 1994'.

"(2) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

"(A) teachers must be major players in educational reform in the United States;

"(B) teachers are isolated from their peers and have virtually no time during the school day to consult with other teachers;

"(C) there is a shortage of sustained, year-round professional development programs for teachers;

"(D) successful teaching methods are not adequately shared among teachers;

"(E) teachers are the best teachers of other teachers because practicing classroom teachers have experience that no outside consultant can match;

"(F) it is important for universities and schools to collaborate on teacher development programs if teaching and learning are to be improved;

"(G) pertinent research is not shared among teachers in a professional setting;

"(H) exemplary teachers should be recognized for their abilities and contributions and encouraged to refine their teaching methods;

"(I) each State should support a nationally based teacher training program that is modeled after the National Writing Project for teachers of the core academic subjects, including early childhood education, mathematics, science, English, civics and government, foreign languages, and arts;

"(J) the National Writing Project is a nationally recognized and honored nonprofit organization that recognizes there are teachers in every region of the United States who have developed successful methods for teaching writing and that such teachers can be trained and encouraged to train other teachers;

"(K) the National Writing Project is a collaborative university-school program which offers summer and school year inservice teacher training programs and a dissemination network to inform and teach teachers regarding developments in the field of writing;

"(L) each year over 125,000 teachers voluntarily seek training in National Writing Project intensive summer institutes and workshops and school year inservice programs through 1 of the 155 sites located within the United States, and in 18 sites located outside of the United States;

"(M) in the 20 years of its existence, over 1,100,000 teachers, administrators and parents have participated in National Writing Project programs;

"(N) less than $16 per teacher was the average cost in Federal dollars for all teacher training at writing projects in academic year 1991–1992;

"(O) for every dollar in Federal support, the National Writing Project provides over $5 in matching funds from States, local universities and schools, and the private sector;

"(P) private foundation resources, although generous in the past concerning National Writing Project programs, are inadequate to fund all of the National Teacher Training Project sites needed, and the future of the program is in jeopardy without secure financial support;

"(Q) the National Writing Project has become a model for programs in other fields, such as science, mathematics, history, literature, foreign languages, and the performing arts, and the development of programs in other fields should continue with the support of Federal funds; and

"(R) each of the 50 States should participate in the National Teacher Training Project by establishing regional teacher training sites in early childhood development, mathematics, science, English, civics and government, foreign languages, and arts to serve all teachers within the State.

"Subpart 3—Professional Development Demonstration Project

"SEC. 2141. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

"(1) underlying the standards-driven framework of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act and the high academic standards for eligible students under title I is a widespread need to prepare teachers to teach to higher standards;

"(2) prospective and current teachers need knowledge and skills beyond what such teachers currently possess;

"(3) while both the Goals 2000: Educate America Act and titles I and II have extensive references to professional development of teachers, there are no provisions to incorporate 'on-the-ground' planning and implementation to serve as models for local educational agencies across the Nation; and

"(4) better prepared teachers can lead to improved student achievement, especially for students who are furthest from reaching high standards.

"(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this subpart—

"(1) to address the need for professional development with a primary focus on teachers;

"(2) to provide both prospective teachers and current teachers opportunities to learn both the content and the pedagogy needed to teach to high standards; and

"(3) to build models, in a few cities and States, that demonstrate new organizational arrangements and deep investments in teachers necessary to better prepare teachers for new standards and assessments.

"SEC. 2142. DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

"(2) other partners that—

"(A) shall include, at a minimum, a teachers' union (if appropriate), one or more institutions of higher education which may include faculty from schools of education and faculty from schools of arts and sciences, and a local parent or community council; and

"(B) may include a business partner or a nonprofit organization with a demonstrated record in staff development.

"(2) DISTRIBUTION.—The Secretary shall award not less than 75 percent of the funds available for grants under this part to eligible partnerships serving the schools with the greatest number of poor students. To the extent possible, such grants shall be awarded to eligible partnerships serving both rural and urban school districts and in a manner that reflects geographic and racial diversity.

"SEC. 2144. PLAN.

"Each eligible partnership desiring assistance under this subpart shall develop a plan for the program to be assisted under this subpart. Such plan shall—

"(1) identify clearly how such plan will support an overall systemic reform strategy giving special attention to the role of teacher preparation for new standards and assessment;

"(2) describe the eligible partnership's instructional objectives and how the professional development activities will support such objectives;

"(3) specify the organizational arrangements and delivery strategies to be used, such as teacher centers, professional development schools, teacher networks, academic alliances, as well as the curriculum for teachers;

"(4) specify the commitments the local educational agencies, teacher's union, institutions of higher education or any other entity participating in such partnership are prepared to make, not only to support program activities such as release time, contractual flexibility, support for interns or student teachers if applicable, but also to sustain the central aspects of the plan after the expiration of the grant; and

"(5) describe how the activities described under this subpart will lead to districtwide policy and budget changes.

"SEC. 2145. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.

"PART B—NATIONAL WRITING PROJECT

"SEC. 2201. SHORT TITLE.

"This part may be cited as the 'National Writing Project Act'.

"SEC. 2202. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) the United States faces a crisis in writing in schools and in the workplace;

"(2) the writing problem has been magnified by the rapidly changing student populations in the Nation's schools and the growing number of students who are at risk because of limited English proficiency;

"(3) over the past 2 decades, universities and colleges across the country have reported increasing numbers of entering freshmen who are unable to write at a level equal to the demands of college work;

"(4) American businesses and corporations are concerned about the limited writing skills of entry-level workers, and a growing number of executives are reporting that advancement was denied to such executives due to inadequate writing abilities;

"(5) writing and reading are both fundamental to learning, yet writing has been historically neglected in the schools and colleges, and most teachers in the United States elementary schools, secondary schools, and colleges have not been trained to teach writing;

"(6) since 1973, the only national program to address the writing problem in the Nation's schools has been the National Writing Project, a network of collaborative university-school programs whose goal is to improve the quality of student writing and the teaching of writing at all grade levels and to extend the uses of writing as a learning process through all disciplines;

"(7) the National Writing Project offers summer and school year inservice teacher training programs and a dissemination network to inform and teach teachers of developments in the field of writing;

"(8) the National Writing Project is a nationally recognized and honored nonprofit organization that recognizes that there are teachers in every region of the United States who have developed successful methods for teaching writing and that such teachers can be trained and encouraged to train other teachers;

"(9) the National Writing Project has become a model for programs to improve teaching in such other fields as mathematics, science, history, literature, performing arts, and foreign languages;

"(10) the National Writing Project teacher-teaching-teachers program identifies and promotes what is working in the classrooms of the Nation's best teachers;

"(11) the National Writing Project teacher-teaching-teachers project is a positive program that celebrates good teaching practices and good teachers and through its work with schools increases the Nation's corps of successful classroom teachers;

"(12) evaluations of the National Writing Project document the positive impact the project has had on improving the teaching of writing, student performance, and student thinking and learning ability;

"(13) the National Writing Project programs offer career-long education to teachers, and teachers participating in the National Writing Project receive graduate academic credit;

"(14) each year over 100,000 teachers voluntarily seek training in National Writing Project intensive summer institutes and workshops and school-year inservice programs through one of the 154 regional sites located in 45 States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and in four sites that serve United States teachers teaching in United States dependent and independent schools;

"(15) 250 National Writing Project sites are needed to establish regional sites to serve all teachers;

"(16) private foundation resources, although generous in the past, are inadequate to fund all of the National Writing Project sites needed and the future of the program is in jeopardy without secure financial support;

"(17) independent evaluation studies have found the National Writing Project to be highly cost-effective compared to other professional development programs for teachers; and

"(18) during 1991, the first year of Federal support for the National Writing Project, the National Writing Project matched the $1,951,975 in Federal support with $9,485,504 in matching funds from State, local, and other sources.

"SEC. 2203. NATIONAL WRITING PROJECT.

"(a) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary is authorized to make a grant to the National Writing Project (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'grantee'), a nonprofit educational organization which has as its primary purpose the improvement of the quality of student writing and learning, and the teaching of writing as a learning process in the Nation's classrooms—

"(2) funds made available by the Secretary to the grantee pursuant to any contract entered into under this section will be used to pay the Federal share of the cost of establishing and operating teacher training programs as provided in paragraph (1); and

"(2) SUPPLEMENT AND NOT SUPPLANT.—Grants awarded pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be used to supplement and not supplant State and local funds available for the purposes set forth in paragraph (1).

"(3) MAXIMUM GRANT AMOUNT.—Each grant awarded pursuant to this subsection shall not exceed $2,000.

"(f) NATIONAL ADVISORY BOARD.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The National Writing Project shall establish and operate a National Advisory Board.

The results of such evaluation shall be made available to the appropriate committees of the Congress.

"(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for the grant to the National Writing Project, $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1995, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years, to carry out the provisions of this section.

"PART C—SUPPORT AND ASSISTANCE FOR ESEA PROGRAMS

"Subpart 1—Comprehensive Regional Centers

"SEC. 2301. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) high-quality technical assistance can enhance the improvements in teaching and learning achieved through the implementation of programs assisted under this Act;

"(2) comprehensive technical assistance is an essential ingredient of the overall strategy of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994 to improve programs and to provide all children opportunities to meet challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards;

"(3) States, local educational agencies, and schools serving students with special needs, such as students with limited-English proficiency and students with disabilities, have great need for comprehensive technical assistance in order to use funds under this Act to provide such students with opportunities to learn to challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards;

"(4) current technical assistance efforts are fragmented and categorical in nature, and thus fail to address adequately the needs of States and local educational agencies for help in integrating into a coherent strategy for improving teaching and learning the various programs under this Act with State and local programs and other education reform efforts;

"(5) too little creative use is made of technology as a means of providing information and assistance in a cost-effective way;

"(6) comprehensive technical assistance can help schools and school systems focus on improving opportunities for all children to meet challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards, as such schools and systems implement programs under this Act;

"(7) comprehensive technical assistance will provide one-stop shopping to help States, local educational agencies, participating colleges and universities, and schools integrate Federal, State, local education and pupil services programs in ways that contribute to improving schools and entire school systems; and

"(8) technical assistance in support of programs assisted under this Act should be coordinated with the Department's regional offices, the regional educational laboratories, and other technical assistance efforts supported by the Department.

"SEC. 2302. PURPOSE.

"The purpose of this part is to make available to States, local educational agencies, schools, and other recipients of funds under this Act technical assistance in—

"(1) administering and implementing programs authorized by this Act;

"(2) implementing school reform programs; and

"(3) coordinating such programs with other Federal, State, and local education activities, so that all students are provided opportunities to meet challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards.

"SEC. 2303. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

"(a) COMPREHENSIVE REGIONAL CENTERS.—Notwithstanding section 6205, the Secretary is authorized to establish one center in each of the Department's ten regions, and one center at the Pacific Regional Education Laboratory in Honolulu, Hawaii, and may establish field offices for each such center, in order to provide comprehensive technical assistance to States, local educational agencies, schools, and other recipients of funds under this Act in the administration and implementation of programs authorized by this Act. In allocating resources among the centers, the Secretary shall consider the geographic distribution of students with special needs.

"(b) TECHNOLOGY-BASED TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary is authorized to provide a technology-based technical assistance service that will—

"(1) support the administration and implementation of programs authorized by this Act by providing information, including legal and regulatory information, and technical guidance and information about best practices; and

"(2) be accessible to all States, local educational agencies, schools, community-based organizations, and others who are recipients of funds under this Act.

"SEC. 2304. ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.

"TITLE IV—MAGNET SCHOOLS ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 4101. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) magnet schools are a significant part of our Nation's effort to achieve voluntary desegregation in our Nation's schools;

"(2) the use of magnet schools has increased dramatically since the date of enactment of the Magnet Schools Assistance program, with approximately 1,400,000 students nationwide now attending such schools, of which more than 60 percent of the students are nonwhite;

"(3) magnet schools offer a wide range of distinctive programs that have served as models for school improvement efforts;

"(4) in administering the Magnet Schools Assistance program, the Federal Government has learned that—

"(A) where magnet programs are implemented for only a portion of a school's student body, special efforts must be made to discourage the isolation of—

"(i) magnet students from other students in the school; and

"(ii) students by racial characteristics;

"(B) school districts can maximize their effectiveness in achieving the purposes of the Magnet Schools Assistance program if such districts have more flexibility in the administration of such program in order to serve students attending a school who are not enrolled in the magnet school program;

"(C) school districts must be creative in designing magnet schools for students at all academic levels, so that school districts do not skim off only the highest achieving students to attend the magnet schools;

"(D) consistent with desegregation guidelines, school districts must seek to enable participation in magnet school programs by students who reside in the neighborhoods where the programs operate; and

"(E) in order to ensure that magnet schools are sustained after Federal funding ends, the Federal Government must assist school districts to improve their capacity to continue to operate magnet schools at a high level of performance;

"(5) it is in the best interest of the Federal Government to—

"(A) continue the Federal Government's support of school districts implementing court-ordered desegregation plans and school districts seeking to foster meaningful interaction among students of different racial and ethnic backgrounds, beginning at the earliest stage of such students' education;

"(B) ensure that all students have equitable access to quality education that will prepare such students to function well in a culturally diverse, technologically oriented, and highly competitive, global community; and

"(C) maximize the ability of school districts to plan, develop, implement and continue effective and innovative magnet schools that contribute to State and local systemic reform.

"SEC. 4102. STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

"The purpose of this title is to assist in the desegregation of school districts by providing financial assistance to eligible local educational agencies for—

"(1) the elimination, reduction, or prevention of minority group isolation in elementary and secondary schools with substantial proportions of minority students;

"(2) the development and implementation of magnet school projects that will assist local educational agencies in achieving systemic reforms and providing all students the opportunity to meet challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards;

"(3) the development and design of innovative educational methods and practices; and

"(4) courses of instruction within magnet schools that will substantially strengthen the knowledge of academic subjects and the grasp of tangible and marketable vocational skills of students attending such schools.

"SEC. 4103. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

"The Secretary, in accordance with this title, is authorized to make grants to local educational agencies, and consortia of such agencies where appropriate, to carry out the purpose of this title for magnet schools that are—

"(1) part of an approved desegregation plan; and

"(2) designed to bring students from different social, economic, ethnic, and racial backgrounds together.

"SEC. 4104. DEFINITION.

"For the purpose of this title, the term 'magnet school' means a public school or public education center that offers a special curriculum capable of attracting substantial numbers of students of different racial backgrounds.

"SEC. 4105. ELIGIBILITY.

"(1) is implementing a plan undertaken pursuant to a final order issued by a court of the United States, or a court of any State, or any other State agency or official of competent jurisdiction, and that requires the desegregation of minority-group-segregated children or faculty in the elementary and secondary schools of such agency; or

"(2) without having been required to do so, has adopted and is implementing, or will, if assistance is made available to such local educational agency or consortium of such agencies under this part, adopt and implement a plan that has been approved by the Secretary as adequate under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 for the desegregation of minority-group-segregated children or faculty in such schools.

"SEC. 4106. APPLICATIONS AND REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) APPLICATIONS.—An eligible local educational agency or consortium of such agencies desiring to receive assistance under this title shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information and assurances as the Secretary may require.

"(b) INFORMATION AND ASSURANCES.—Each such application shall include—

''TITLE V—BETTER SCHOOLS FOR AMERICA

''PART A—SAFE AND DRUG-FREE SCHOOLS AND COMMUNITIES

''SEC. 5101. FINDINGS.

''(1) The seventh National Education Goal provides that by the year 2000, all schools in America will be free of drugs and violence and the unauthorized presence of firearms and alcohol, and offer a disciplined environment that is conducive to learning.

''(2) The widespread use of alcohol and other drugs among the Nation's secondary school students, and increasingly by students in elementary schools as well, constitutes a grave threat to the physical and mental well-being of such students, and significantly impedes the learning process. For example, data show that students who drink tend to receive lower grades and are more likely to miss school because of illness than students who do not drink.

''(3) Our Nation's schools and communities are increasingly plagued by violence and crime. Approximately 3,000,000 thefts and violent crimes occur in or near our Nation's schools every year, the equivalent of more than 16,000 incidents per school day.

''(4) Violence that is linked to prejudice and intolerance victimizes entire communities leading to more violence and discrimination.

''(5) Violence and drug abuse have numerous personal and societal roots, and character education is an important component of any comprehensive strategy to address the serious problems of violence and drug abuse.

''(6) The tragic consequences of violence and the illegal use of alcohol and other drugs by students are felt not only by students and their families, but by such students' communities and the Nation, which can ill afford to lose such students' skills, talents, and vitality.

''(7) Alcohol and tobacco are widely used by young people. Such use can, and does, have adverse consequences for young people, their families, communities, schools, and colleges. Drug prevention programs for youth that address only controlled drugs send an erroneous message that alcohol and tobacco do not present significant problems, or that society is willing to overlook their use. To be credible, messages opposing illegal drug use by youth should address alcohol and tobacco as well.

''(8) Every day approximately 3,000 children start smoking. Thirty percent of all secondary school seniors are smokers. Half of all new smokers begin smoking before the age of 14, 90 percent of such smokers begin before the age of 21, and the average age of the first use of smokeless tobacco is under the age of 10. Use of tobacco products has been linked to serious health problems. Drug education and prevention programs that include tobacco have been effective in reducing teenage use of tobacco.

''(9) Drug and violence prevention programs are essential components of a comprehensive strategy to promote school safety and to reduce the demand for and use of drugs throughout the Nation. Schools and local organizations in communities throughout the Nation have a special responsibility to work together to combat the growing epidemic of violence and illegal drug use and should measure the success of their programs against clearly defined goals and objectives.

"(10) Students must take greater responsibility for their own well-being, health, and safety if schools and communities are to achieve the goals of providing a safe, disciplined, and drug-free learning environment.

"SEC. 5102. PURPOSE.

"The purpose of this title is to support programs to meet the seventh National Educational Goal by preventing violence in and around schools and by strengthening programs that prevent the illegal use of alcohol, tobacco, and other drugs, involve parents, and are coordinated with related Federal, State, and community efforts and resources, through the provision of Federal assistance to—

"(1) States for grants to local and intermediate educational agencies and consortia to establish, operate, and improve local programs of school drug and violence prevention, early intervention, rehabilitation referral, and education in elementary and secondary schools (including intermediate and junior high schools);

"(2) States for grants to, and contracts with, community-based organizations and other public and private nonprofit agencies and organizations for programs of drug and violence prevention, early intervention, rehabilitation referral, and education for school dropouts and other high-risk youth;

"(3) States for development, training, technical assistance, and coordination activities;

"(4) institutions of higher education to establish, operate, expand, and improve programs of school drug and violence prevention, education, and rehabilitation referral for students enrolled in colleges and universities; and

"(5) public and private nonprofit organizations to conduct training, demonstrations, research, and evaluation, and to provide supplementary services for the prevention of drug use and violence among students and youth.

"SEC. 5103. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"Subpart 1—State Grants for Drug and Violence Prevention Programs

The purpose of such interim application and plan shall be to afford the State the opportunity to fully develop and review such State's application and comprehensive plan otherwise required by this section. "(B) disproportionate and improper placement in special education and other special programs due to the use of inappropriate evaluation procedures;

"(C) the limited-English proficiency of their own parents, which hinders the parents' ability to fully participate in the education of their children; and

"(D) a shortage of teachers and other staff who are professionally trained and qualified to serve such children and youth;

''(3) the Federal Government, as exemplified by title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and section 204(f) of the Equal Education Opportunities Act of 1974, has a special and continuing obligation to ensure that States and local school districts take appropriate action to provide equal educational opportunities to children and youth of limited-English proficiency;

''(A) large numbers of such children and youth have needs that must be met by a program of instruction designed specifically for such children and youth;

''(B) a primary purpose of such programs must be developing the English language skills of such children and youth;

''(6) Native Americans and Native American languages (as such terms are defined in section 103 of the Native American Languages Act) have a unique status under Federal law that requires special policies within the broad purposes of this Act to serve the education needs of language minority students in the United States.

"SEC. 7103. POLICY; AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"PART B—FOREIGN LANGUAGE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

"SEC. 7201. SHORT TITLE.

"This part may be cited as the 'Foreign Language Assistance Act of 1994'.

"SEC. 7202. FINDINGS.

"(1) Foreign language proficiency is crucial to our Nation's economic competitiveness and national security. Significant improvement in the quantity and quality of foreign language instruction offered in our Nation's elementary and secondary schools is necessary.

"(2) All Americans need a global perspective. To understand the world around us, we must acquaint ourselves with the languages, cultures, and history of other nations.

"(3) Proficiency in two or more languages should be promoted for all American students. Multilingualism enhances cognitive and social growth, competitiveness in the global marketplace, national security, and understanding of diverse people and cultures.

"(4) The United States lags behind other developed countries in offering foreign language study to elementary and secondary school students.

"(5) Four out of five new jobs in the United States are created from foreign trade.

"(6) The optimum time to begin learning a second language is in elementary school, when children have the ability to learn and excel in several foreign language acquisition skills, including pronunciation, and when children are most open to appreciating and valuing a culture other than their own.

"(7) Foreign language study can increase children's capacity for critical and creative thinking skills and children who study a second language show greater cognitive development in areas such as mental flexibility, creativity, tolerance, and higher order thinking skills.

"(8) Children who have studied a foreign language in elementary school achieve expected gains and score higher on standardized tests of reading, language arts, and mathematics than children who have not studied a foreign language.

"SEC. 7203. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

"(a) PROGRAM AUTHORITY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make grants, on a competitive basis, to State educational agencies or local educational agencies to pay the Federal share of the cost of innovative model programs providing for the establishment, improvement or expansion of foreign language study for elementary and secondary school students.

"(b) AMOUNT.—The Secretary shall determine the amount of the incentive payment under subsection (a) for each public elementary school for each fiscal year on the basis of the number of students participating in a program described in such subsection at such school for such year compared to the total number of such students at all such schools in the United States for such year.

"(c) REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary shall consider a program to be designed to lead to communicative competency in a foreign language if such program is comparable to a program that provides at least 45 minutes of instruction in a foreign language at least 4 days per week throughout an academic year.

"(b) REQUIREMENTS OF CONTRACT.—Any contract entered into under subsection (a) shall—

"(1) provide that the contractor will enter into subcontracts with local private nonprofit groups or organizations or with public agencies under which each subcontractor will agree to establish, operate, and provide the non-Federal share of the cost of reading motivation programs that include the distribution of books, by gift, to the extent feasible, or loan, to children from birth through secondary school age;

"(2) provide that funds made available to subcontractors will be used only to pay the Federal share of the cost of such programs;

"PART C—PUBLIC CHARTER SCHOOLS

"SEC. 8201. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

"(1) enhancement of parent and student choices among public schools can assist in promoting comprehensive educational reform and give more students the opportunity to learn to challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards, if sufficiently diverse and high-quality choices, and genuine opportunities to take advantage of such choices, are available to all students;

"(2) useful examples of such choices can come from States and communities that experiment with methods of offering teachers and other educators, parents, and other members of the public the opportunity to design and implement new public schools and to transform existing public schools;

"(3) the new schools developed through such process should be free to test a variety of educational approaches and should, therefore, be exempted from restrictive rules and regulations if the leadership of such schools commits to attaining specific and ambitious educational results for students consistent with challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards for all students;

"(4) charter schools, as such schools have been implemented in a few States, can embody the necessary mixture of enhanced choice, exemption from restrictive regulations, and a focus on learning gains;

"(5) charter schools, including charter schools that are schools-within-schools, can help reduce school size, which reduction can have a significant effect on student achievement;

"(6) the Federal Government should test, evaluate, and disseminate information on a variety of charter school models in order to help demonstrate the benefits of this promising educational reform; and

"(7) there is a strong documented need for cash flow assistance to charter schools that are starting up, because State and local operating revenue streams are not immediately available.

"(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this part to increase national understanding of the charter schools model by—

"(1) providing financial assistance for the design and initial implementation of charter schools; and

"(2) evaluating the effects of such schools, including the effects on students, staff, and parents.

"(3) too often schools fail to challenge students to do their best work, and students who are not challenged will not learn to challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards, fully develop their talents, and realize their potential;

"(4) unless the special abilities of gifted and talented students are recognized and developed during their elementary and secondary school years, much of their special potential for contributing to the national interest is likely to be lost;

"(8) the experience and knowledge gained in developing and implementing programs for gifted and talented students can and should be used as a basis to—

"(A) develop a rich and challenging curriculum for all students; and

"(B) provide all students with important and challenging subject matter to study and encourage the habits of hard work.

"(b) STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this part—

"(1) to provide financial assistance to State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public and private agencies and organizations, to initiate a coordinated program of research, demonstration projects, personnel training, and similar activities designed to build a nationwide capability in elementary and secondary schools to meet the special educational needs of gifted and talented students;

"(2) to encourage the development of rich and challenging curricula for all students through the appropriate application and adaptation of materials and instructional methods developed under this part; and

"(3) to supplement and make more effective the expenditure of State and local funds, for the education of gifted and talented students.

"SEC. 8403. CONSTRUCTION.

"Nothing in this part shall be construed to prohibit a recipient of funds under this part from serving gifted and talented students simultaneously with students with similar educational needs, in the same educational settings where appropriate.

"SEC. 8404. AUTHORIZED PROGRAMS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—From the sums appropriated under section 8407 in any fiscal year the Secretary (after consultation with experts in the field of the education of gifted and talented students) shall make grants to or enter into contracts with State educational agencies, local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, or other public agencies and private agencies and organizations (including Indian tribes and Indian organizations (as such terms are defined by the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act) and Hawaiian native organizations) to assist such agencies, institutions, and organizations which submit applications in carrying out programs or projects authorized by this part that are designed to meet the educational needs of gifted and talented students, including the training of personnel in the education of gifted and talented students and in the use, where appropriate, of gifted and talented services, materials, and methods for all students.

“(a) General Priority.—In the administration of this part the Secretary shall give highest priority—

“(1) to the identification of and the provision of services to gifted and talented students who may not be identified and served through traditional assessment methods (including economically disadvantaged individuals, individuals of limited-English proficiency, and individuals with disabilities); and

“(2) to programs and projects designed to develop or improve the capability of schools in an entire State or region of the Nation, through cooperative efforts and participation of State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public and private agencies and organizations (including business, industry, and labor), to plan, conduct, and improve programs for the identification of and the provision of services to gifted and talented students.

“(b) Service Priority.—In approving applications under section 8404(a), the Secretary shall assure that in each fiscal year at least one-half of the applications approved under such section address the priority described in subsection (a)(1).

“SEC. 8406. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

“(a) Participation of Private School Children and Teachers.—In making grants and entering into contracts under this part, the Secretary shall ensure, where appropriate, that provision is made for the equitable participation of students and teachers in private nonprofit elementary and secondary schools, including the participation of teachers and other personnel in professional development programs for serving such children.

“(b) Program Operations.—The Secretary shall ensure that the programs under this part are administered within the Department by a person who has recognized professional qualifications and experience in the field of the education of gifted and talented students and who shall serve as a focal point of national leadership and information on mechanisms to carry out the purpose of this part.

“(a) In General.—There are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1995, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years, to carry out the provisions of this part.

“(b) Special Rule.—If the amount appropriated under subsection (a) for a fiscal year exceeds $20,000,000, 40 percent of such amount in excess of $20,000,000 shall be available for strategies and programs designed for the education of gifted and talented students that may be adapted and used to improve teaching and learning for all students in a school and to help all students in a school develop their talents, realize their potential, and meet challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards, while not diminishing the curriculum and instruction for students traditionally identified as gifted and talented.

“PART G—WOMEN'S EDUCATIONAL EQUITY

“SEC. 8451. SHORT TITLE; FINDINGS.

“(a) Short Title.—This part may be cited as the ‘Women's Educational Equity Act of 1994’.

“(b) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

“(1) since the enactment of title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, women and girls have made strides in educational achievement and in their ability to avail themselves of educational opportunities;

“(2) because of funding provided under the Women's Educational Equity Act, more curricula, training and other educational materials concerning educational equity for women and girls are available for national dissemination;

“(3) significant gender inequities still exist in teaching and learning practices, for example—

“(A) sexual harassment, particularly that experienced by girls, undermines the ability of schools to provide a safe and equitable learning or workplace environment;

“(B) girls may often receive significantly less attention from classroom teachers than boys, and girls of color have less interaction with teachers than all other girls;

“(C) classroom textbooks and other educational materials do not sufficiently reflect the experiences, achievements, or concerns of women and, in most cases, are not written by women or persons of color;

“(D) girls do not take as many mathematics and science courses as boys, girls lose confidence in their mathematics and science ability as girls move through adolescence, there are few women role models in the sciences, and women continue to be concentrated in low-paying, traditionally female jobs that do not require mathematics and science skills; and

“(E) pregnant and parenting teenagers are at high risk for dropping out of school and existing dropout prevention programs do not adequately address the needs of such population;

“(4) Federal support should address not only research and development of innovative model curricula and teaching and learning strategies to promote gender equity, but should, to the extent feasible, also help schools and local communities implement and institutionalize gender equitable practices;

“(5) Federal assistance for gender equity must be tied to systemic reform, involve collaborative efforts to implement effective gender practices at the local level, and encourage parental participation; and

“(6) excellence in education, high educational achievements and standards, and the full participation of women and girls in American society cannot be achieved without educational equity for women and girls.

“SEC. 8452. STATEMENT OF PURPOSES.

“It is the purpose of this part—

“(1) to promote gender equity in education in the United States;

“(2) to provide financial assistance to enable educational agencies and institutions to meet the requirements of title IX of the Educational Amendments of 1972; and

“(3) to promote equity in education to women and girls who suffer multiple forms of discrimination based on sex, race, ethnic origin, limited-English proficiency, disability, or age.

“SEC. 8807. DEFINITIONS.

“For the purpose of this part the term ‘common core learning time’ means high-quality, engaging instruction in challenging content in each of the following core academic subjects described in the third National Education Goal:

“(3) Science.
“(4) Foreign languages.
“(5) Civics and government.
“(6) Economics.
“(7) Arts.
“(8) History.
“(9) Geography.

“There are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1995, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years, to carry out this part.

“PART O—LONGER SCHOOL YEAR

“This part may be cited as the ‘Longer School Year Incentive Act of 1994’.

“(1) A competitive world economy requires that students in the United States receive education and training that is at least as rigorous and high-quality as the education and training received by students in competitor countries.

“(2) Despite our Nation's transformation from a farm-based economy to one based on manufacturing and services, the school year is still based on the summer needs of an agrarian economy.

“(3) For most students in the United States, the school year is 180 days long. In Japan students go to school 243 days per year, in Germany students go to school 240 days per year, in Austria students go to school 216 days per year, in Denmark students go to school 200 days per year, and in Switzerland students go to school 195 days per year.

“(4) In the final four years of schooling, students in schools in the United States spend a total of 1,460 hours on core academic subjects, less than half of the 3,528 hours so spent in Germany, the 3,280 hours so spent in France, and the 3,170 hours so spent in Japan.

“(5) American students' lack of formal schooling is not counterbalanced with more homework. The opposite is true, as half of all European students report spending at least two hours on homework per day, compared to only 29 percent of American students. Twenty-two percent of American students watch five or more hours of television per day, while less than eight percent of European students watch that much television.

“(6) More than half of teachers surveyed in the United States cite ‘children who are left on their own after school’ as a major problem.

“(7) Over the summer months, disadvantaged students not only fail to advance academically, but many forget much of what such students had learned during the previous school year.

“(8) Funding constraints as well as the strong pull of tradition have made extending the school year difficult for most States and school districts.

“(9) Experiments with extended and multitrack school years have been associated with both increased learning and more efficient use of school facilities.

“It is the purpose of this part to allow the Secretary to provide financial incentives and assistance to States or local educational agencies to enable such States or agencies to substantially increase the amount of time that students spend participating in quality academic programs, and to promote flexibility in school scheduling.

“The Secretary is authorized to award grants to States or local educational agencies to enable such States or agencies to support public school improvement efforts that include the expansion of time devoted to core academic subjects and the extension of the school year to not less than 210 days.

“SEC. 8855. APPLICATION.

“Any State or local educational agency desiring assistance under this part shall submit to the Secretary an application at such time, in such manner, and accompanied by such information as the Secretary may require.

“For the purpose of carrying out this part there are authorized to be appropriated $100,000,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the succeeding fiscal years.

“PART P—CREATING SMALLER LEARNING COMMUNITIES

“SEC. 8871. FINDINGS.

“(1) smaller school communities can have a significant, positive impact on student achievement, including grade promotion, school attendance and motivation;

“(2) large schools can benefit from reorganization into smaller learning communities, such as schools-within-schools; and

“(3) smaller learning communities can provide students with a variety of educational options based on various themes, while providing all students engaging, innovative instruction in challenging curricula that will enable such communities to meet State standards.

“SEC. 8872. PURPOSE.

“It is the purpose of this part to improve the quality and effectiveness of teaching and learning by encouraging and supporting school and school district efforts to create smaller schools, including those that exist as schools-within-schools.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to award grants to local educational agencies having applications approved under section 8854 to enable such agencies to carry out the authorized activities described in section 8875 in public elementary and secondary schools.

“(c) DURATION.—Each grant under subsection (a) shall be awarded for a period of not more than 3 years.

“(10) a description of the administrative and managerial relationship between the local educational agency and the smaller learning community or communities, including how such agency will demonstrate a commitment to the continuity of the smaller learning community or communities, including the continuity of student and teacher assignment to a particular learning community;

“(11) how the applicant will coordinate or use funds provided under this part with other funds provided under this Act or other Federal laws;

“(12) grade levels or ages of students who will participate in the smaller learning community or communities; and

"PART R—ALASKA NATIVE EDUCATION

"SEC. 8921. SHORT TITLE.

"This part may be cited as the 'Alaska Native Educational Equity, Support and Assistance Act'.

"SEC. 8922. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds and declares:

"(1) The attainment of educational success is critical to the betterment of the conditions, long term well being and preservation of the culture of Alaska Natives.

"(2) It is the policy of the Federal Government to encourage the maximum participation by Alaska Natives in the planning and the management of Alaska Native education programs.

"(3) Alaska Native children enter and exit school with serious educational handicaps.

"(4) The educational achievement of Alaska Native children is far below national norms. In addition to low Native performance on standardized tests, Native student drop out rates are high, and Natives are significantly underrepresented among holders of baccalaureate degrees in the State of Alaska. As a result Native students are being denied their opportunity to become full participants in society by grade school and high school educations that are condemning an entire generation to an underclass status and a life of limited choices.

"(5) The programs authorized herein, combined with expanded Head Start, infant learning and early childhood education programs, and parent education programs are essential if educational handicaps are to be overcome.

"(6) The sheer magnitude of the geographic barriers to be overcome in delivering educational services in rural and village Alaska should be addressed through the development and implementation of innovative, model programs in a variety of areas.

"(7) Congress finds that Native children should be afforded the opportunity to begin their formal education on a par with their non-Native peers. The Federal Government should lend support to efforts developed by and undertaken within the Alaska Native community to improve educational opportunity for all students.

"SEC. 8923. PURPOSE.

"It is the purpose of this part to—

"(1) recognize the unique educational needs of Alaska Natives;

"(2) authorize the development of supplemental educational programs to benefit Alaska Natives;

"(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall make direct grants to Alaska Native organizations or educational entities with experience in developing or operating Alaska Native programs, or to partnerships involving Alaska Native organizations, to implement home instruction programs for Alaska Native preschool youngsters. The objective of such programs shall be to develop parents as educators for their children and to assure the active involvement of parents in the education of their children from the earliest ages.

The programs shall be designed to—

"(1) prepare qualified students from rural areas who are preparing to enter village high schools to excel in science and mathematics; and

"(2) provide those support services to the families of such students that are needed to enable such students to benefit from the program.

"(b) USES OF FUNDS.—The program funded under this section may include—

"(1) the identification of the students eligible to participate in the program;

"(2) the conduct of educational, psychosocial, and developmental activities which hold reasonable promise of resulting in substantial enrichment of the educational performance of the participating students;

"(3) leadership programs designed to provide for the replication of the program in other subject matter areas and the dissemination of information derived from the program; and

"(4) appropriate research, evaluation and related activities pertaining to the benefits of such enrichment programs.

"(c) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Not more than 10 percent of the funds appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section for any fiscal year may be used for administrative purposes.

"(A) has or commits to acquire expertise in the education of Alaska Natives; and

"(B) has Alaska Natives in substantive and policy-making positions within the organization.

"PART S—PROMOTING SCHOLAR-ATHLETE COMPETITIONS

"SEC. 8931. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) athletic and intellectual competition can be a force for understanding and friendship among an economically and culturally diverse population;

"(2) the World Scholar-Athlete Games in 1993 brought together 2,000 young scholars ranging in age from 16 to 19 who are talented in art, creative writing, poetry, singing or athletics, from 125 countries and all 50 States; and

"(3) through experiences on the playing field, in group discussions and informal gatherings, scholar-athlete competitions can foster understanding, acceptance and friendship among students who might otherwise never interact.

"It is the purpose of this part to provide authorization for the establishment of a model educational, athletic, and cultural event that—

"(1) is intended to bring together academically qualified youth of diverse cultural, economic, and social backgrounds;

"(2) is replicated by each State; and

"(3) invites adult and student leaders in education, business and government representing all 50 States to attend and observe the model event, including such event's educational and cultural programs, so that such leaders are qualified to administer similar events in their home States.

"PART T—COMMUNITY SCHOOL PARTNERSHIPS

"This part may be cited as the 'Community School Partnership Act'.

"SEC. 8942. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) the local community, when properly organized and challenged, is one of the best sources of academic support, motivation toward achievement, and financial resources for aspiring postsecondary students;

"(2) local communities, working to complement or augment services currently being offered by area schools and colleges, can raise the educational expectations and increase the rate of postsecondary attendance of their youth by forming locally based organizations that provide both academic support (including guidance, counseling, mentoring, tutoring, encouragement, and recognition) and tangible, locally raised, effectively targeted, publicly recognized financial assistance;

"(3) proven methods of stimulating these community efforts can be promoted through Federal support for the establishment of area program centers to organize and challenge community efforts to develop educational incentives and support for local students; and

"(4) using Federal funds to leverage private contributions to help students from low-income families attain educational and career goals is an efficient and effective investment of scarce taxpayer-provided resources.

"TITLE IX—SPECIAL PROGRAMS

"PART A—IMPACT AID

"SEC. 9001. PURPOSE.

"In order to fulfill the Federal responsibility to assist with the provision of educational services to federally connected children, because certain activities of the Federal Government place a financial burden on the local educational agencies serving areas where such activities are carried out and to help such children meet challenging State standards, it is the purpose of this part to provide financial assistance to local educational agencies that—

"(1) experience a substantial and continuing financial burden due to the acquisition of real property by the United States;

"(2) educate children who reside on Federal property and whose parents are employed on Federal property;

"(3) educate children of parents who are in the military services and children who live in low-rent housing;

"(4) experience sudden and substantial increases or decreases in enrollments because of military realignments; or

"(5) need special assistance with capital expenditures for construction activities because of the enrollments of substantial numbers of children who reside on Federal lands.

"SEC. 9002. PAYMENTS RELATING TO FEDERAL ACQUISITION OF REAL PROPERTY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Where the Secretary, after consultation with any local educational agency and with the appropriate State educational agency, determines for a fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1999—

"(1) that the United States owns Federal property in the local educational agency, and that such property—

"(A) has been acquired by the United States since 1938;

"(B) was not acquired by exchange for other Federal property in the local educational agency which the United States owned before 1939; and

"(C) had an assessed value (determined as of the time or times when so acquired) aggregating 10 percent or more of the assessed value of—

"(i) all real property in the local educational agency (similarly determined as of the time or times when such Federal property was so acquired); or

"(ii) all real property in the local educational agency as assessed in the first year preceding or the year succeeding acquisition, whichever is greater, only if—

"(I) the assessment of all real property in the local educational agency is not made at the same time or times that such Federal property was so acquired and assessed; and

"(II) State law requires an assessment be made of property so acquired; and

"(2) that such agency is not being substantially compensated for the loss in revenue resulting from such ownership by increases in revenue accruing to the agency from the conduct of Federal activities with respect to such Federal property, then the local educational agency shall be eligible to receive for such fiscal year such amount as, in the judgment of the Secretary, is equal to the continuing Federal responsibility for the additional financial burden with respect to current expenditures placed on such agency by such acquisition of property.

"(b) AMOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A)(i) The amount that a local educational agency shall be paid under subsection (a) for a fiscal year shall be calculated in accordance with paragraph (2), except that such amount shall be reduced by the Secretary by an amount equal to the amount of revenue, if any, that such agency received during the previous fiscal year from activities conducted on such property.

"(ii) For purposes of clause (i), the amount of revenue that a local educational agency receives during the previous fiscal year from activities conducted on Federal property shall not include payments received by the agency from the Secretary of Defense to support—

"(I) the operation of a domestic dependent elementary or secondary school; or

"(II) the provision of a free public education to dependents of members of the Armed Forces residing on or near a military installation.

"(B) If funds appropriated under section 9014(a) are insufficient to pay the amount determined under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall ratably reduce the payment to each eligible local educational agency.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, a local educational agency may not be paid an amount under this section that when added to the amount such agency receives under section 9003(b)(2) exceeds the maximum amount that such agency is eligible to receive for such fiscal year under section 9003(b)(1)(C).

"(2) APPLICATION OF CURRENT LEVIED REAL PROPERTY TAX RATE.—In making a determination of the amount that would have been derived in such year under paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary shall apply the current levied real property tax rate for current expenditures levied by fiscally independent local educational agencies or imputed, for fiscally dependent local educational agencies, to the current annually determined aggregate assessed value of such acquired Federal property.

"(3) DETERMINATION OF AGGREGATE ASSESSED VALUE.—Such aggregate assessed value of such acquired Federal property shall be determined (on the basis of the highest and best use of property adjacent to such acquired Federal property as of the time such value is determined), and provided to the Secretary, by the local official responsible for assessing the value of real property located in the jurisdiction of such local educational agency for the purpose of levying a property tax.

"(c) APPLICABILITY TO TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT.—For the purposes of this section, any real property with respect to which payments are being made under section 13 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 shall not be regarded as Federal property.

"(d) OWNERSHIP BY UNITED STATES.—The United States shall be deemed to own Federal property for the purposes of this Act, where—

"(1) prior to the transfer of Federal property, the United States owned Federal property meeting the requirements of subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of subsection (a)(1); and

"(2) the United States transfers a portion of the property referred to in paragraph (1) to another nontaxable entity, and the United States—

"(A) restricts some or any construction on such property;

"(B) requires that the property be used in perpetuity for the public purposes for which the property was conveyed;

"(C) requires the grantee of the property to report to the Federal Government (or its agent) regarding information on the use of the property;

"(D) except with the approval of the Federal Government (or its agent), prohibits the sale, lease, assignment, or other disposal of the property unless such sale, lease, assignment, or other disposal is to another eligible government agency; and

"(E) reserves to the Federal Government a right of reversion at any time the Federal Government (or its agent) deems it necessary for the national defense.

"(e) DISTRICT CONTAINING FOREST SERVICE LAND AND SERVING CERTAIN COUNTIES.—Beginning with fiscal year 1995, a school district shall be deemed to meet the requirements of subsection (a)(1)(C) if such school district meets the following requirements:

"(1) The school district contains between 20,000 and 60,000 acres of land that has been acquired by the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture between 1915 and 1990, as demonstrated by written evidence from the Forest Service satisfactory to the Secretary.

"(2) The school district serves a county certified by State law in 1875 or 1890.

"(f) SPECIAL RULE.—Beginning with fiscal year 1994, and notwithstanding any other provision of law limiting the period during which fiscal year 1994 funds may be obligated, the Secretary of Education shall treat the local educational agency serving the Wheatland R-II School District, Wheatland, Missouri, as meeting the eligibility requirements of section 2(a)(1)(C) of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) (20 U.S.C. 237(a)(1)(C)) or section 9003(a)(1)(C) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

"(a) COMPUTATION OF PAYMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of computing the amount that a local educational agency is eligible to receive under subsection (b), (d), or (f) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall determine the number of children who were in average daily attendance in the schools of such agency, and for whom such agency provided free public education, during the preceding school year and who, while in attendance at such schools—

"(A)(i) resided on Federal property with a parent employed on Federal property situated in whole or in part within the boundaries of the school district of such agency; or

"(ii) resided on Federal property with a parent who is an official of, and accredited by, a foreign government and is a foreign military officer;

"(B) resided on Federal property and had a parent on active duty in the uniformed services (as defined in section 101 of title 37, United States Code);

"(C) resided on Indian lands;

"(D)(i) had a parent on active duty in the uniformed services (as defined by section 101 of title 37, United States Code) but did not reside on Federal property; or

"(E) resided in low-rent housing;

"(F) resided on Federal property and is not described in subparagraph (A) or (B); or

"(G) resided with a parent employed on Federal property situated—

"(i) in whole or in part in the county in which the school district of such agency is located, or in whole or in part in the school district of such agency if the school district is located in more than one county; or

"(ii) if not in such county or district, in whole or in part in the same State as the school district of such agency.

"(2) DETERMINATION OF WEIGHTED STUDENT UNITS.—For purposes of computing the basic support payment under subsection (b), the Secretary shall calculate the total number of weighted student units for a local educational agency by adding together the results obtained by the following computations:

"(A) Multiply the number of children described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) by a factor of 1.0.

"(C) Multiply the number of children described in subparagraphs (D) and (E) of paragraph (1) by a factor of .10.

"(D) Multiply the number of children described in subparagraphs (F) and (G) of paragraph (1) by a factor of .05.

"(b) BASIC SUPPORT PAYMENTS AND PAYMENTS WITH RESPECT TO FISCAL YEARS IN WHICH INSUFFICIENT FUNDS ARE APPROPRIATED.—

"(1) BASIC SUPPORT PAYMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—From the amount appropriated under section 9014(b) for a fiscal year, the Secretary is authorized to make basic support payments to eligible local educational agencies with children described under subsection (a).

"(B) ELIGIBILITY.—A local educational agency shall be eligible to receive a basic support payment under subparagraph (A) for a fiscal year with respect to a number of children determined under subsection (a) only if the number of children so determined with respect to such agency amounts to the lesser of—

"(i) at least 400 such children; or

"(ii) a number of such children which equals at least 3 percent of the total number of children who were in average daily attendance, during such year, at the schools of such agency and for whom such agency provided free public education.

"(C) MAXIMUM AMOUNT.—The maximum amount that a local educational agency is eligible to receive under this subsection for any fiscal year is the sum of the total weighted student units, as computed under subsection (a)(2), multiplied by the greater of—

"(i) one-half of the average per pupil expenditure of the State in which the local educational agency is located for the third fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made;

"(ii) one-half of the average per pupil expenditures of all of the States for the third fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made;

"(iii) the comparable local contribution rate certified by the State, as determined under regulations prescribed to carry out the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress), as such regulations were in effect on January 1, 1994; or

"(iv) the average per pupil expenditure of the State in which the local educational agency is located, multiplied by the local contribution percentage.

"(2) PAYMENTS WITH RESPECT TO FISCAL YEARS IN WHICH INSUFFICIENT FUNDS ARE APPROPRIATED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For any fiscal year in which the sums appropriated under section 9014(b) are insufficient to pay to each local educational agency the full amount computed under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall make payments in accordance with this paragraph.

"(B) LEARNING OPPORTUNITY THRESHOLD PAYMENTS.—(i) For fiscal years described in subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall compute a learning opportunity threshold payment (hereafter in this title referred to as the 'threshold payment') by multiplying the amount obtained under paragraph (1)(C) by the total percentage obtained by adding—

"(I) the percentage of federally connected children for each local educational agency determined by calculating the fraction, the numerator of which is the total number of children described under subsection (a)(1) and the denominator of which is the total number of children in average daily attendance at the schools served by such agency; and

"(II) the percentage that funds under paragraph (1)(C) represent of the total budget of the local educational agency, determined by calculating the fraction, the numerator of which is the total amount of funds calculated for each local educational agency under this subsection (not including amounts received under subsection (f)), and the denominator of which is the total current expenditures for such agency in the second preceding fiscal year for which the determination is made.

"(ii) Such total percentage used to calculate threshold payments under paragraph (1) shall not exceed 100.

"(iii) For the purpose of determining the percentages described in subclauses (I) and (II) of clause (i) that are applicable to the local educational agency providing free public education to students in grades 9 through 12 residing on Hanscom Air Force Base, Massachusetts, the Secretary shall consider only that portion of such agency's total enrollment of students in grades 9 through 12 when calculating the percentage under such subclause (I) and only that portion of the total current expenditures attributed to the operation of grades 9 through 12 in such agency when calculating the percentage under subclause (II).

"(C) RATABLE DISTRIBUTION.—For fiscal years described in subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall make payments as a ratable distribution based upon the computation made under subparagraph (B).

"(c) PRIOR YEAR DATA.—All calculations under this section shall be based upon data for each local educational agency from not later than the first fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the agency is making application for payment.

"(d) CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—From the amount appropriated under section 9014(c) for a fiscal year, the Secretary shall pay to each eligible local educational agency, on a pro rata basis, the amounts determined by—

"(A) multiplying the number of children described in subparagraphs (A)(ii), (B) and (C) of subsection (a)(1) who are eligible to receive services under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act by a factor of 1.0; and

"(B) multiplying the number of children described in subparagraph (D) of subsection (a)(1) who are eligible to receive services under such Act by a factor of 0.5.

"(2) USE OF FUNDS.—A local educational agency that receives funds under paragraph (1) shall use such funds to provide a free appropriate public education to children described in paragraph (1) in accordance with the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act.

"(e) HOLD-HARMLESS AMOUNTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (3), the total amount that the Secretary shall pay a local educational agency under subsection (b) shall not be less than 95 percent of the amount such agency received for the preceding fiscal year—

"(A) in the case of fiscal year 1995 only, under section 3 of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress); or

"(B) in the case of fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, or 1999, under such subsection (b).

"(2) TWO-YEAR APPLICABILITY.—The provisions of paragraph (1) shall apply to any one local educational agency for a maximum of two consecutive fiscal years, except that in the second such year the total amount the Secretary shall pay a local educational agency under subsection (b) shall not be less than 85 percent of the amount such agency received under such subsection in the preceding fiscal year.

"(3) RATABLE REDUCTIONS.—(A)(i) If necessary in order to make payments to local educational agencies in accordance with paragraph (1), the Secretary first shall ratably reduce payments under subsection (b) to local educational agencies that do not receive a payment under this subsection.

"(ii) If additional funds become available for making payments under paragraph (1) for such fiscal year, payments that were reduced under clause (i) shall be increased on the same basis as such payments were reduced.

"(B)(i) If the sums made available under this part for any fiscal year are insufficient to pay the full amounts that all local educational agencies in all States are eligible to receive under paragraphs (1) and (2) after the application of subparagraph (A) for such year, the Secretary shall ratably reduce payments to all such agencies for such year.

"(ii) If additional funds become available for making payments under paragraphs (1) and (2) for such fiscal year, payments that were reduced under clause (i) shall be increased on the same basis as such payments were reduced.

"(f) Additional Assistance for Heavily Impacted Local Educational Agencies.—

"(1) Reservation.—From amounts appropriated under section 9014(b) for a fiscal year, the Secretary shall provide additional assistance to meet special circumstances relating to the provision of education in local educational agencies eligible to receive assistance under this section.

"(2) Eligibility.—(A) A local educational agency shall be eligible to receive additional assistance under this subsection only if such agency—

"(i)(I) has an enrollment of federally connected children described in subsection (a)(1) which constitutes at least 50 percent of the total student enrollment of such agency; and

"(II) has a tax rate for general fund purposes which is at least 95 percent of the average tax rate for general fund purposes of comparable local educational agencies in the State;

"(ii)(I) has an enrollment of federally connected children described in subsection (a)(1) which constitutes at least 35 percent of the total student enrollment of such agency; and

"(II) has a tax rate for general fund purposes which is at least 125 percent of the average tax rate for general fund purposes of comparable local educational agencies in the State; or

"(iii) is a local educational agency whose boundaries are the same as a Federal military installation.

"(B) If the current expenditures in those local educational agencies which the Secretary has determined to be generally comparable to the local educational agency for which a computation is made under subsection (b)(1)(C) are not reasonably comparable because of unusual geographical factors which affect the current expenditures necessary to maintain, in such agency, a level of education equivalent to that maintained in such other agencies, then the Secretary shall increase the local contribution rate for such agency by such an amount which the Secretary determines will compensate such agency for the increase in current expenditures necessitated by such unusual geographical factors. The amount of any such supplementary payment may not exceed the per-pupil share (computed with regard to all children in average daily attendance), as determined by the Secretary, of the increased current expenditures necessitated by such unusual geographic factors.

"(C) Any local educational agency determined eligible under clause (iii) of subparagraph (A) shall be deemed to have met the tax efforts requirements for eligibility under clause (i)(II) or (ii)(II) of such subparagraph.

"(3) Maximum payments.—

"(A) In general.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall determine the maximum amount that a local educational agency may receive under this subsection in accordance with the following computations:

"(i) The Secretary shall first determine the greater of—

"(I) the average per pupil expenditure of the State in which the local educational agency is located;

"(II) the average per pupil expenditure of generally comparable school districts located in the State of the local educational agency, as defined in regulations issued by the Secretary; or

"(III) the average per pupil expenditure of three generally comparable school districts located in the State of the local educational agency, as defined in regulations issued by the Secretary.

"(ii) The Secretary shall next subtract from the amount determined under clause (i) the total amount of general fund revenues received by the local educational agency from any general fund source per pupil, other than revenues provided under this subsection.

"(iii) The Secretary shall next multiply the amount determined under clause (ii) by the total number of students in average daily attendance of the local educational agency.

"(iv) If the tax rate used by the local educational agency is greater than 95 percent, but less than 100 percent, of the tax rate of comparable school districts, the Secretary shall next multiply the amount determined under clause (iii) by the percentage that the tax rate of the local educational agency is of—

"(I) the average tax rate of its generally comparable school districts; or

"(II) the average tax rate of all the school districts in the State in which the local educational agency is located.

"(v) The Secretary shall next subtract the total amount of payments received by a local educational agency under subsections (b) and (d) for a fiscal year from the amount determined under clause (iii) or clause (iv), as the case may be.

"(B) Special rule.—(i) With respect to payments under this subsection for a local educational agency described in clause (ii) or (iii) of paragraph (2)(A), the maximum amount of such payments shall be computed by taking the product of the average per pupil expenditure in all States multiplied by .7, except that such amount may not exceed 125 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in all local educational agencies in the State, and multiplying such product by the number of students who are served by such local educational agency and described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of subsection (a)(1).

"(ii) The payment under this subsection that a local educational agency described in clauses (ii) and (iii) of paragraph (2)(A) shall receive in any fiscal year shall be equal to the maximum amount described in clause (i) minus the amount of payments such agency receives under subsections (b) and (d) for such year.

"(4) Current year data.—The Secretary shall, for purposes of providing assistance under this subsection, use—

"(A) student and revenue data from the fiscal year for which the local educational agency is applying for assistance under this subsection; and

"(B) the most recent data available on per-pupil cost adjusted to reflect per-pupil cost made current by increasing or decreasing the per-pupil expenditure data for the second fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made by the same percentage increase or decrease reflected between the per-pupil expenditure data for the fourth fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made and the per-pupil expenditure data for such second year.

"(5) Determination for fiscal year 1994.—Notwithstanding the proviso referring to section 3(d)(2)(B) of Public Law 81–874 under the following heading "IMPACT AID" under title III of the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of 1994, or any provision of paragraph (2) of section 3(d) of such Public Law which is consistent with this proviso, determinations regarding the eligibility for an amount of payments under section 3(d)(2)(B) of such Public Law for fiscal year 1994 shall be made on the basis of 1994 data, and related Department regulations in effect during fiscal year 1992 shall be used in the tabulation of payments.

"(6) Reduction in payments.—If funds appropriated to carry out this subsection are insufficient to pay in full the amounts determined under paragraph (3), the Secretary shall ratably reduce the payment to each eligible local educational agency.

"(g) Additional Payments for Local Educational Agencies With High Concentrations of Children With Severe Disabilities.—

"(1) In general.—If any local educational agency receives Federal funds from sources other than this part to carry out the purposes of this part for any fiscal year due to the enrollment of children described under subsection (a), then the Secretary shall consider such funds as a payment to such agency under this part for such fiscal year.

"(2) Special rule.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if funds appropriated pursuant to section 9014(b) for payments under subsection (b) to such agency for a fiscal year which when added to the funds described in paragraph (1) received by such agency for such fiscal year exceed the maximum amount described under subsection (b)(1)(C), then the Secretary shall make available from the funds appropriated under section 9014(b) for such fiscal year such excess amounts to any local educational agency serving two or more children described under subparagraph (B) or (D) of section 9003(a)(1) who have a severe disability and a parent serving in the uniformed services (as defined by section 101 of title 37, United States Code) and assigned to a particular permanent duty station for compassionate reasons (compassionate post assignment) for the total costs associated with such children who are provided an educational program provided outside the schools of such agency.

"(3) Remaining funds.—If funds remain after payments are made under paragraph (2) for any fiscal year, then such remaining funds shall be made available for expenditures under subsection (d) in such fiscal year on a pro rata basis consistent with the requirements of such subsection.

"(4) Ratable reductions.—If amounts available to carry out paragraph (2) for any fiscal year are insufficient to pay in full the total payment that all eligible local educational agencies are eligible to receive under such paragraph for such year, then the Secretary shall ratably reduce such payments to such agencies for such year.

"(h) Other Funds.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a local educational agency receiving funds under this section may also receive funds under section 6 of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) or such section's successor authority.

"(i) Maintenance of Effort.—A local educational agency may receive funds under this part for any fiscal year only if the State educational agency finds that either the combined fiscal effort per student or the aggregate expenditures of that agency and the State with respect to the provision of free public education by that agency for the preceding fiscal year was not less than 90 percent of such combined fiscal effort or aggregate expenditures for the second preceding fiscal year.

"SEC. 9004. POLICIES AND PROCEDURES RELATING TO CHILDREN RESIDING ON INDIAN LANDS.

"(a) In General.—A local educational agency that claims children residing on Indian lands for the purpose of receiving funds under section 9003 shall establish policies and procedures to ensure that—

"(1) such children participate in programs and activities supported by such funds on an equal basis with all other children;

"(2) parents of such children and Indian tribes are afforded an opportunity to present their views on such programs and activities, including an opportunity to make recommendations on the needs of those children and how the local educational agency may help such children realize the benefits of such programs and activities;

"(3) parents and Indian tribes are consulted and involved in planning and developing such programs and activities;

"(4) relevant applications, evaluations, and program plans are disseminated to the parents and Indian tribes; and

"(5) parents and Indian tribes are afforded an opportunity to present their views to such agency regarding such agency's general educational program.

"(c) WAIVER.—A local educational agency that claims children residing on Indian lands for the purpose of receiving funds under section 9003 shall not be required to comply with the requirements of subsections (a) and (b) for any fiscal year with respect to any Indian tribe from which such agency has received a written statement that the agency need not comply with those subsections because the tribe is satisfied with the provision of educational services by such agency to such children.

"(d) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND ENFORCEMENT.—The Secretary shall—

"(1) provide technical assistance to local educational agencies, parents, and Indian tribes to enable such agencies, parents, and tribes to carry out this section; and

"(2) enforce this section through such actions, which may include the withholding of funds, as the Secretary determines to be appropriate, after affording the affected local educational agency, parents, and Indian tribe an opportunity to present their views.

"(e) COMPLAINTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) Any tribe, or its designee, which has students in attendance at a local educational agency may, in its discretion and without regard to the requirements of any other provision of law, file a written complaint with the Secretary regarding any action of a local educational agency taken pursuant to, or relevant to, the requirements of this section.

"(B) Within ten working days from receipt of a complaint, the Secretary shall—

"(i) designate a time and place for a hearing into the matters relating to the complaint at a location in close proximity to the local educational agency involved, or if the Secretary determines there is good cause, at some other location convenient to both the tribe, or its designee, and the local educational agency;

"(ii) designate a hearing examiner to conduct the hearing; and

"(iii) notify the affected tribe or tribes and the local educational agency involved of the time, place, and nature of the hearing and send copies of the complaint to the local educational agency and the affected tribe or tribes.

"(2) HEARING.—The hearing shall be held within 30 days of the designation of a hearing examiner and shall be open to the public. A record of the proceedings shall be established and maintained.

"(3) EVIDENCE; RECOMMENDATIONS; COST.—The complaining tribe, or its designee, and the local educational agency shall be entitled to present evidence on matters relevant to the complaint and to make recommendations concerning the appropriate remedial actions. Each party to the hearing shall bear only its own costs in the proceedings.

"(4) FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS.—Within 30 days of the completion of the hearing, the hearing examiner shall, on the basis of the record, make written findings of fact and recommendations concerning appropriate remedial action, if any, which should be taken. The hearing examiner's findings and recommendations, along with the hearing record, shall be forwarded to the Secretary.

"(5) WRITTEN DETERMINATION.—Within 30 days of his receipt of the findings, recommendations, and record, the Secretary shall, on the basis of the record, make a written determination of the appropriate remedial action, if any, to be taken by the local educational agency, the schedule for completion of the remedial action, and the reasons for the Secretary's decision.

"(6) COPIES PROVIDED.—Upon completion of his final determination, the Secretary shall provide the complaining tribe, or its designee, and the local educational agency with copies of the hearing record, the hearing examiner's findings and recommendations, and the Secretary's final determination. The final determination of the Secretary shall be subject to judicial review.

"(7) CONSOLIDATION.—In all actions under this subparagraph, the Secretary shall have discretion to consolidate complaints involving the same tribe or local educational agency.

"(8) WITHHOLDING.—If the local educational agency rejects the determination of the Secretary, or if the remedy required is not undertaken within the time established and the Secretary determines that an extension of the time established will not effectively encourage the remedy required, the Secretary shall withhold payment of all moneys to which such local agency is eligible under section 9003 until such time as the remedy required is undertaken, except where the complaining tribe or its designee formally requests that such funds be released to the local educational agency, except that the Secretary may not withhold such moneys during the course of the school year if the Secretary determines that such withholding would substantially disrupt the educational programs of the local educational agency.

"(9) REJECTION OF DETERMINATION.—If the local educational agency rejects the determination of the Secretary and a tribe exercises the option under section 1101(d) of the Education Amendments of 1978, to have education services provided either directly by the Bureau of Indian Affairs or by contract with the Bureau of Indian Affairs, any Indian students affiliated with that tribe who wish to remain in attendance at the local educational agency against whom the complaint which led to the tribal action under such subsection (d) was lodged may be counted with respect to that local educational agency for the purpose of receiving funds under section 9004. In such event, funds under such section shall not be withheld pursuant to subparagraph (D) and no further complaints with respect to such students may be filed under subparagraph (C)(i).

"(f) CONSTRUCTION.—This section is based upon the special relationship between the Indian nations and the United States and nothing in this section shall be construed to relieve any State of any duty with respect to any citizens of that State.

"SEC. 9006. PAYMENTS FOR SUDDEN AND SUBSTANTIAL INCREASES IN ATTENDANCE OF MILITARY DEPENDENTS.

"(a) ELIGIBILITY.—A local educational agency is eligible for a payment under this section if—

"(2) the number of children in average daily attendance with a parent on active duty (as defined in section 101(18) of title 37, United States Code) in the Armed Forces who are in attendance at such agency because of the assignment of their parent to a new duty station between May 15 and September 30, inclusive, of the fiscal year for which the determination is made, as certified by an appropriate local official of the Department of Defense, is at least ten percent or 100 more than the number of children in average daily attendance in the preceding school year.

"(b) APPLICATION.—A local educational agency that wishes to receive a payment under this section shall file an application with the Secretary by October 15 of the school year for which payment is requested, in such manner and containing such information as the Secretary may prescribe, including information demonstrating that such agency is eligible for such a payment.

"(c) CHILDREN TO BE COUNTED.—For each eligible local educational agency that applies for a payment under this section, the Secretary shall determine the lesser of—

"(2) the number of children described in subsection (a)(2).

"(d) PAYMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), from the amount appropriated for a fiscal year under section 9014(d), the Secretary shall pay each local educational agency with an approved application an amount equal to one-half of the national average per-pupil expenditure multiplied by the number of such children determined under subsection (c) for that local educational agency.

"(2) RATABLE REDUCTION.—(A) If the amount appropriated to carry out this section for any fiscal year is insufficient to pay the full payment that all eligible local educational agencies are eligible to receive under this section for such year, then the Secretary shall ratably reduce the payments to such agencies for such year.

"(B) If additional funds become available for making payments under paragraph (1) for such fiscal year, payments that were reduced under subparagraph (A) shall be increased on the same basis as such payments were reduced.

"(e) NOTIFICATION PROCESS.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish, with the Secretary of Defense, a notification process relating to the closure of Department of Defense facilities, or the adjustment of personnel levels assigned to such facilities, which may substantially affect the student enrollment levels of local educational agencies which receive or may receive payments under this title.

"(2) INFORMATION.—Such process shall provide timely information regarding such closures and such adjustments—

"(A) by the Secretary of Defense to the Secretary; and

"(B) by the Secretary to the affected local educational agencies.

"SEC. 9007. CONSTRUCTION.

"(a) PAYMENTS AUTHORIZED.—From the amount appropriated for each fiscal year under section 9014(e), the Secretary shall make payments to each local educational agency—

"(1) that receives a basic payment under section 9003(b); and

"(2)(A) in which the number of children determined under section 9003(a)(1)(C) constituted at least 50 percent of the number of children who were in average daily attendance in the schools of such agency during the preceding school year;

"(B) that receives assistance under section 9003(f); or

"(C) that receives assistance under section 9006.

"(b) AMOUNT OF PAYMENTS.—The amount of a payment to each such agency for a fiscal year shall be equal to—

"(2) the number of children determined under section 9003(a)(2) for all local educational agencies described in subsection (a), but not including any children attending a school assisted or provided by the Secretary under section 9008 or section 10 of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, 81st Congress) (as such Act was in effect on the day preceding the date of enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994); multiplied by

"(3) the number of such children determined for such agency.

"(c) USE OF FUNDS.—Any local educational agency that receives funds under this section shall use such funds for construction, as defined in section 9013(3).

"(d) SPECIAL RULE.—In carrying out section 14(c) of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, 81st Congress) (20 U.S.C. 644(c)) or any successor authority, the Secretary of Education shall waive any amount of local effort in excess of $200,000 that would otherwise be required under paragraphs (3) and (4) of such section, or any successor authority, respectively, and any regulations issued thereunder, in awarding funds to the Winona R-III School District, Missouri, with respect to its application #MO-86-C-3601A36.

"SEC. 9008. FACILITIES.

"(a) CURRENT FACILITIES.—From the amount appropriated for any fiscal year under section 9014(f), the Secretary may continue to provide assistance for school facilities that were supported by the Secretary under section 10 of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, 81st Congress) (as such Act was in effect on the day preceding the date of the enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994).

"(b) TRANSFER OF FACILITIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, as soon as practicable, transfer to the appropriate local educational agency or another appropriate entity all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to each facility provided under section 10 of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, 81st Congress), or under section 204 or 310 of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) (as such Acts were in effect on January 1, 1958).

"(2) OTHER REQUIREMENTS.—Any such transfer shall be without charge to such agency or entity, and prior to such transfer, the transfer shall be consented to by the local educational agency or other appropriate entity, and may be made on such terms and conditions as the Secretary deems appropriate to carry out the purposes of this title.

"SEC. 9009. TREATMENT OF PAYMENTS BY THE STATES IN DETERMINING ELIGIBILITY FOR, AND THE AMOUNT OF, STATE AID.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), no payments may be made under this title for any fiscal year to any local educational agency in any State if—

"(1) such State has taken into consideration payments under this title in determining—

"(A) the eligibility of any local educational agency in that State for State aid for free public education of children; or

"(B) the amount of such aid with respect to any such agency; during that fiscal year or the preceding fiscal year; or

"(2) such State makes such aid available to local educational agencies in such a manner as to result in less State aid to any local educational agency which is eligible for payments under this title than such agency would receive if such agency were not so eligible.

"(b) EXCEPTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), if a State has in effect a program of State aid for free public education for any fiscal year, which is designed to equalize expenditures for free public education among the local educational agencies of that State, payments under this title for any fiscal year may be taken into consideration by such State in determining the relative—

"(A) financial resources available to local educational agencies in that State; and

"(B) financial need of such agencies for the provision of free public education for children served by such agency, provided that a State may consider as local resources funds received under this title only in proportion to the share that local tax revenues covered under a State equalization program are of total local tax revenues.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE.—The portion of payments under sections 9003(b), 9003(d) and 9003(f)(1) for children described in section 9003(a)(1)(C) which are attributable to the difference between the total weighted student units determined under section 9003(a)(2)(B) and the total weighted student units determined under section 9003(a)(2)(A), shall not be taken into consideration by the State for the purpose of this subparagraph. Whenever a State educational agency or local educational agency will be adversely affected by the operation of this section, such agency shall be afforded notice and an opportunity for a hearing prior to the reduction or termination of payments pursuant to this section.

"(3) DEFINITIONS.—The terms 'State aid' and 'equalize expenditures' as used in this section shall be defined by the Secretary by regulation, after consultation with State and local educational agencies affected by this section, provided that the term 'equalize expenditures' shall not be construed in any manner adverse to a program of State aid for free public education which provides for taking into consideration the additional cost of providing free public education for particular groups or categories of pupils in meeting the special educational needs of such children as disabled children, economically disadvantaged children, limited-English proficient children, and gifted and talented children.

"(4) NOTICE AND CERTIFICATION.—(A) If a State desires to take payments under this title into consideration as provided in this subsection for any fiscal year, that State shall, not later than 60 days prior to the beginning of such fiscal year, submit notice to the Secretary of its intention to do so. Such notice shall be in such form and be accompanied by such information as to enable the Secretary to determine the extent to which the program of State aid of that State is consistent with the provisions of paragraph (1). In addition, such notice shall be accompanied by such evidence as the Secretary finds necessary that each local educational agency in that State has been given notice of the intention of the State. If the Secretary determines that the program of State aid of a State submitting notice under this paragraph is consistent with the provisions of paragraph (1), the Secretary shall certify such determination to that State.

"(B) Prior to certifying any determination under subparagraph (A) for any State for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall give the local educational agencies in that State an opportunity for a hearing at which such agencies may present their views with respect to the consistency of the State aid program of that State with the provisions of paragraph (1).

"(C) The Secretary shall not finally deny to any State for any fiscal year certification of a determination under subparagraph (A) without first giving that State an opportunity for a hearing.

"(5) REQUIREMENT.—Any State whose program of State aid was certified by the Secretary under paragraph (4) for fiscal year 1988, but whose program was determined by the Secretary under paragraph (4)(A) not to meet the requirements of paragraph (1) for one or more of the fiscal years 1989 through 1992—

"(A) shall be deemed to have met the requirements of paragraph (1) for each of the fiscal years 1989 through 1992; and

"(B) shall not, beginning with fiscal year 1993, and notwithstanding any other provision of this paragraph, take payments under this title into consideration as provided under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year unless the Secretary has previously certified such State's program for such fiscal year.

"(6) GRANDFATHER CLAUSE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a State shall be deemed to meet the requirements of this subsection if such State—

"(A) met the requirements of section 5(d)(2) of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) on July 1, 1994; and

"(B) continues to meet the requirements of such section 5(d)(2) for each fiscal year for which the determination is made.

"(b) Other Agencies.—Each Federal agency administering Federal property on which children reside, and each agency principally responsible for an activity that may occasion assistance under this title, shall, to the maximum extent practicable, comply with requests of the Secretary for information the Secretary may require to carry out this title.

"(c) Special Rules.—

"(1) CERTAIN CHILDREN ELIGIBLE UNDER SUBSECTION (a) OR (b) OF SECTION 3 OF PUBLIC LAW 81–874.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, for any fiscal year before fiscal year 1995, the Secretary shall treat as eligible under subsection (a) or (b) of section 3 of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress), and shall forgive the obligation of a local educational agency to repay any amounts that such agency received under such section for such fiscal year based on, any child who would be eligible under such subsections except that such child does not meet the requirements of subsection (a)(1)(B) or (b)(2)(B), respectively, of such section 3, if such child meets the requirements of paragraph (3) of this subsection.

"(2) CERTAIN CHILDREN ELIGIBLE UNDER SUBPARAGRAPHS (A) AND (G)(ii) OF SECTION 9003(a)(1).—(A) The Secretary shall treat as eligible under subparagraph (A) of section 9003(a)(1) any child who would be eligible under such subparagraph except that the Federal property on which the child resides or on which the child's parent is employed is not in the same State in which the child attends school, if such child meets the requirements of paragraph (3) of this subsection.

"(B) The Secretary shall treat as eligible under subparagraph (G) of section 9003(a)(1) any child who would be eligible under such subparagraph except that such child does not meet the requirements of clause (ii) of such subparagraph, if such child meets the requirements of paragraph (3) of this subsection.

"(3) Requirements.—A child meets the requirements of this paragraph if on the day preceding the date of enactment—

"(A) such child resides—

"(i) in a State adjacent to the State in which the local educational agency serving the school such child attends is located; or

"(ii) with a parent employed on Federal property in a State adjacent to the State in which such agency is located;

"(B) the schools of such agency are within a more reasonable commuting distance of such child's home than the schools of the local educational agency that serves the school attendance area where such child resides;

"(C) attending the schools of the local educational agency that serves the school attendance area where such child resides will impose a substantial hardship on such child; and

"(D) the State in which such child attends school provides funds for the education of such child on the same basis as all other public school children in the State, unless otherwise permitted under section 5(d)(2) of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) or section 9009(b) of this part.

The clerk of the court shall promptly transmit a copy of the petition to the Secretary. The Secretary shall then file in the court the record of the proceedings on which the Secretary's action was based, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(2) Findings of fact.—The findings of fact by the Secretary, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Secretary to take further evidence. The Secretary may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify the Secretary's previous action, and shall file in the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

"(3) Review.—The court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Secretary or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"PART B—EMERGENCY IMMIGRANT EDUCATION PROGRAM

"SEC. 9201. FINDINGS; PURPOSE; DEFINITION.

''(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

''(1) the education of our Nation's children and youth is one of the most sacred government responsibilities;

''(2) local educational agencies have struggled to fund adequately education services;

''(3) in the case of Plyler v. Doe, the Supreme Court held that States have a responsibility under the Equal Protection Clause of the Constitution to educate all children, regardless of immigration status; and

''(4) immigration policy is solely a responsibility of the Federal Government.

''(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this part is to assist eligible local educational agencies that experience unexpectedly large increases in their student population due to immigration to—

''(1) provide high-quality instruction to immigrant children and youth; and

''(2) help such children and youth—

''(A) with their transition into American society; and

''(B) meet the same challenging State performance standards expected of all children and youth.

''(c) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this subpart, the term 'immigrant children and youth' means individuals who—

''(1) are aged three through 21;

''(2) were not born in any State; and

''(3) have not been attending one or more schools in any one or more States for more than three full academic years.

"SEC. 9202. STATE ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.

''For any fiscal year, a State educational agency may reserve not more than 1.5 percent of the amount allocated to such agency under section 9204 to pay the costs of performing such agency's administrative functions under this part.

"SEC. 9203. WITHHOLDING.

''Whenever the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any State educational agency, finds that there is a failure to meet the requirement of any provision of this part, the Secretary shall notify that agency that further payments will not be made to the agency under this part, or in the discretion of the Secretary, that the State educational agency shall not make further payments under this part to specified local educational agencies whose actions cause or are involved in such failure until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until the Secretary is so satisfied, no further payments shall be made to the State educational agency under this part, or payments by the State educational agency under this part shall be limited to local educational agencies whose actions did not cause or were not involved in the failure, as the case may be.

"SEC. 9204. STATE ALLOCATIONS.

''(a) PAYMENTS.—The Secretary shall, in accordance with the provisions of this section, make payments to State educational agencies for each of the fiscal years 1995 through 1999 for the purpose set forth in section 9201(b).

''(b) ALLOCATIONS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsections (c), (d) and (e), of the amount appropriated for each fiscal year for this part, each State participating in the program assisted under this part shall receive an allocation equal to the proportion of such State's number of immigrant children and youth who are enrolled in elementary and secondary public schools under the jurisdiction of each local educational agency described in paragraph (2) within such State, and in elementary and secondary nonpublic schools within the district served by each such local educational agency, relative to the total number of immigrant children and youth so enrolled in all the States participating in the program assisted under this part.

''(2) ELIGIBLE LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—The local educational agencies referred to in paragraph (1) are those local educational agencies in which the sum of the number of immigrant children and youth who are enrolled in elementary or secondary public schools under the jurisdiction of such agencies, and in elementary or secondary nonpublic schools within the districts served by such agencies, during the fiscal year for which the payments are to be made under this part, is equal to—

''(A) at least 500; or

''(B) at least 3 percent of the total number of students enrolled in such public or nonpublic schools during such fiscal year,

''(c) DETERMINATIONS OF NUMBER OF CHILDREN AND YOUTH.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Determinations by the Secretary under this section for any period with respect to the number of immigrant children and youth shall be made on the basis of data or estimates provided to the Secretary by each State educational agency in accordance with criteria established by the Secretary, unless the Secretary determines, after notice and opportunity for a hearing to the affected State educational agency, that such data or estimate are clearly erroneous.

''(2) SPECIAL RULE.—No such determination with respect to the number of immigrant children and youth shall operate because of an underestimate or overestimate to deprive any State educational agency of the allocation under this section that such State would otherwise have received had such determination been made on the basis of accurate data.

"(d) REALLOCATION.—Whenever the Secretary determines that any amount of a payment made to a State under this part for a fiscal year will not be used by such State for carrying out the purpose for which the payment was made, the Secretary shall make such amount available for carrying out such purpose to one or more other States to the extent the Secretary determines that such other States will be able to use such additional amount for carrying out such purpose. Any amount made available to a State from any appropriation for a fiscal year in accordance with the preceding sentence shall, for purposes of this part, be regarded as part of such State's payment (as determined under subsection (b)) for such year, but shall remain available until the end of the succeeding fiscal year.

"(e) RESERVATION OF FUNDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this part, if the amount appropriated to carry out this part exceeds $50,000,000 for a fiscal year, a State educational agency may reserve not more than 20 percent of such agency's payment under this part for such year to award grants, on a competitive basis, to local educational agencies within the State as follows:

"(A) At least one-half of such grants shall be made available to eligible local educational agencies (as described in subsection (b)(2)) within the State with the highest numbers and percentages of immigrant children and youth.

"(B) Funds reserved under this paragraph and not made available under subparagraph (A) may be distributed to local educational agencies within the State experiencing a sudden influx of immigrant children and youth which are otherwise not eligible for assistance under this part.

"(2) USE OF GRANT FUNDS.—Each local educational agency receiving a grant under paragraph (1) shall use such grant funds to carry out the activities described in section 9207.

"(3) INFORMATION.—Local educational agencies with the highest number of immigrant children and youth receiving funds under paragraph (1) may make information available on serving immigrant children and youth to local educational agencies in the State with sparse numbers of such children.

"(4) DURATION.—Grants awarded under paragraph (1) shall be for a period of not more than two years.

"(5) APPLICATIONS.—(A) Each eligible local educational agency desiring a grant under this subsection shall submit to the Secretary an application in such form, at such time, and containing such information and assurances as the Secretary may require.

"(B) Each such application shall—

"(i) describe—

"(I) the need for the proposed program, including data on the number of immigrant children and youth in the local educational agency to be served and their characteristics, such as language spoken, dropout rates, proficiency in English and the native language, and academic standing in relation to their English proficient peers; and

"(II) the program to be implemented and how such program's design relates to the linguistic and academic needs of the immigrant children and youth to be served; and

"(ii) provide an assurance that the applicant will not reduce the level of State and local funds that the applicant expends for instructional programs for immigrant children and youth if the applicant receives an award under this part.

"SEC. 9205. STATE APPLICATIONS.

"(a) SUBMISSION.—No State educational agency shall receive any payment under this part for any fiscal year unless such agency submits an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information, as the Secretary may reasonably require. Each such application shall—

"(1) provide that the educational programs, services, and activities for which payments under this part are made will be administered by or under the supervision of the agency;

"(2) provide assurances that payments under this part will be used for purposes set forth in sections 9201 and 9207, including a description of how local educational agencies receiving funds under this part will use such funds to meet such purposes, and how the program designs are consistent with other education improvement plans;

"(3) provide an assurance that local educational agencies receiving funds under this part will coordinate the use of such funds with programs assisted under title VII or title I;

"(4) provide assurances that such payments will be distributed among local educational agencies within that State on the basis of the number of immigrant children and youth counted with respect to each such local educational agency under section 9204(b)(1);

"(5) provide assurances that the State educational agency will not finally disapprove in whole or in part any application for funds received under this part without first affording the local educational agency submitting an application for such funds reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing;

"(6) provide for making such reports as the Secretary may reasonably require to perform the Secretary's functions under this part;

"(7) provide assurances—

"(A) that to the extent consistent with the number of immigrant children and youth enrolled in the elementary or secondary nonpublic schools within the district served by a local educational agency, such agency, after consultation with appropriate officials of such schools, shall provide for the benefit of such children and youth secular, neutral, and nonideological services, materials, and equipment necessary for the education of such children and youth;

"(B) that the control of funds provided under this part to any materials, equipment, and property repaired, remodeled, or constructed with those funds shall be in a public agency for the uses and purposes provided in this part, and a public agency shall administer such funds and property; and

"(C) that the provision of services pursuant to this paragraph shall be provided by employees of a public agency or through contract by such public agency with a person, association, agency, or corporation who or which, in the provision of such services, is independent of such elementary or secondary nonpublic school and of any religious organization, and such employment or contract shall be under the control and supervision of such public agency, and the funds provided under this paragraph shall not be commingled with State or local funds; and

"(8) provide an assurance that State and local educational agencies receiving funds under this part will comply with the requirements of section 1120(b).

"(b) APPLICATION REVIEW.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall review all applications submitted pursuant to this section by State educational agencies.

"(2) APPROVAL.—The Secretary shall approve any application submitted by a State educational agency that meets the requirements of this section.

"(3) DISAPPROVAL.—The Secretary shall disapprove any application submitted by a State educational agency which does not meet the requirements of this section, but shall not finally disapprove an application except after reasonable notice, provision of technical assistance, and providing an opportunity for a hearing to the State.

"SEC. 9206. ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

"(a) NOTIFICATION OF AMOUNT.—The Secretary, not later than June 1 of each year, shall notify each State educational agency that has an application approved under section 9205 of the amount of such agency's allocation under section 9204 for the succeeding year.

"(b) SERVICES TO CHILDREN ENROLLED IN NONPUBLIC SCHOOLS.—If by reason of any provision of law a local educational agency is prohibited from providing educational services for children enrolled in elementary and secondary nonpublic schools, as required by section 9205(a)(7), or if the Secretary determines that a local educational agency has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide for the participation on an equitable basis of children enrolled in such schools, the Secretary may waive such requirement and shall arrange for the provision of services to such children through arrangements which shall be subject to the requirements of this part. Such waivers shall be subject to consultation, withholding, notice, and judicial review requirements in accordance with the provisions of title I.

"SEC. 9207. USES OF FUNDS.

"(a) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds awarded under this part shall be used to pay for enhanced instructional opportunities for immigrant children and youth, which may include—

"(1) family literacy, parent outreach, and training activities designed to assist parents to become active participants in the education of their children;

"(2) salaries of personnel, including teacher aides who have been specifically trained, or are being trained, to provide services to immigrant children and youth;

"(3) tutorials, mentoring, and academic or career counseling for immigrant children and youth;

"(4) identification and acquisition of curricular materials, educational software, and technologies to be used in the program;

"(5) basic instructional services which are directly attributable to the presence in the school district of immigrant children, including the costs of providing additional classroom supplies, overhead costs, costs of construction, acquisition or rental of space, costs of transportation, or such other costs as are directly attributable to such additional basic instructional services; and

"(6) such other activities, related to the purposes of this part, as the Secretary may authorize.

"(b) CONSORTIA.—A local educational agency that receives a grant under this part may collaborate or form a consortium with one or more local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and nonprofit organizations to carry out the program described in an application approved under this part.

"(c) SUBGRANTS.—A local educational agency that receives a grant under this part may, with the approval of the Secretary, make a subgrant to, or enter into a contract with, an institution of higher education, a nonprofit organization, or a consortium of such entities to carry out a program described in an application approved under this part, including a program to serve out-of-school youth.

"(d) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this part shall be construed to prohibit a local educational agency from serving immigrant children simultaneously with students with similar educational needs, in the same educational settings where appropriate.

"SEC. 9208. REPORTS.

"(a) BIENNIAL REPORT.—Each State educational agency receiving funds under this part shall submit, once every 2 years, a report to the Secretary concerning the expenditure of funds by local educational agencies under this part. Each local educational agency receiving funds under this part shall submit to the State educational agency such information as the State educational agency determines may be necessary for such report.

"PART C—NATIVE HAWAIIAN EDUCATION

"SEC. 9301. SHORT TITLE.

"This part may be cited as the 'Native Hawaiian Education Act'.

"SEC. 9302. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds and declares as follows:

"(1) Native Hawaiians are a distinct and unique indigenous people with a historical continuity to the original inhabitants of the Hawaiian archipelago, whose society was organized as a nation and internationally recognized as such by the United States, Britain, France and Japan, as evidenced by treaties governing friendship, commerce, and navigation.

"(2) At the time of the arrival of the first nonindigenous people in Hawai'i in 1778, the Native Hawaiian people lived in a highly organized, self-sufficient subsistence social system based on a communal land tenure system with a sophisticated language, culture, and religion.

"(3) From 1826 until 1893, the United States recognized the sovereignty and independence of the Kingdom of Hawai'i, which was established in 1810 under Kamehameha I, extended full and complete diplomatic recognition to the Kingdom of Hawai'i, and entered into treaties and conventions with the Kingdom of Hawai'i to govern friendship, commerce and navigation in 1826, 1842, 1849, 1875, and 1887.

"(4) In 1893, the sovereign, independent, internationally recognized, and indigenous government of Hawai'i, the Kingdom of Hawai'i, was overthrown by a small group of non-Hawaiians, including United States citizens, who were assisted in their efforts by the United States Minister, a United States naval representative, and armed naval forces of the United States. Because of the participation of United States agents and citizens in the overthrow of the Kingdom of Hawai'i, the Congress, on behalf of the people of the United States, apologized to Native Hawaiians for the overthrow and the deprivation of the rights of Native Hawaiians to self-determination through Public Law 103–150 (107 Stat. 1510).

"(5) In 1898, the joint resolution entitled 'A Joint Resolution to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States', approved July 7, 1898 (30 Stat. 750), ceded absolute title of all lands held by the Republic of Hawai'i, including the government and crown lands of the former Kingdom of Hawai'i, to the United States, but mandated that revenue generated from these lands be used 'solely for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands for educational and other public purposes'.

"(6) By 1919, the Native Hawaiian population had declined from an estimated 1,000,000 in 1778 to an alarming 22,600, and in recognition of this severe decline, the Congress in 1921 enacted the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, which designated approximately 200,000 acres of ceded public lands for homesteading by Native Hawaiians.

"(7) Through the enactment of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, the Congress affirmed the special relationship between the United States and the Native Hawaiians, as expressed by then Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, who was quoted in the committee report for the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, as saying: 'One thing that impressed me . . . was the fact that the natives of the island who are our wards, I should say, and for whom in a sense we are trustees, are falling off rapidly in numbers and many of them are in poverty.'.

"(8) In 1959, under the Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union', approved March 18, 1959 (73 Stat. 4), the United States transferred responsibility for the administration of the Hawaiian Home Lands to the State of Hawai'i but reaffirmed the special relationship which existed between the United States and the Hawaiian people by retaining the exclusive power to enforce the trust, including the power to approve land exchanges and legislative amendments affecting the rights of beneficiaries under such Act.

"(9) In 1959, under the Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union', approved March 18, 1959 (73 Stat. 4), the United States ceded to the State of Hawai'i title to the public lands formerly held by the United States, but mandated that such lands be held by the State 'in public trust' and reaffirmed the special relationship which existed between the United States and the Hawaiian people by retaining the legal responsibility to enforce the public trust responsibility of the State of Hawai'i for the betterment of the conditions of Native Hawaiians, as defined in section 201(a) of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920.

"(10) The United States assumed special responsibilities for Native Hawaiian lands and resources at the time of the annexation of the Territory in 1898, upon adoption of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, and upon admission of the State of Hawai'i into the Union in 1959, and has retained certain of those responsibilities.

"(11) In recognition of the special relationship which exists between the United States and the Native Hawaiian people, the Congress has extended to Native Hawaiians the same rights and privileges accorded to American Indian, Alaska Native, Eskimo, and Aleut communities under the Native American Programs Act of 1974, the American Indian Religious Freedom Act, the National Museum of the American Indian Act, the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, the National Historic Preservation Act, and the Native American Languages Act.

"(12) In recognition of the special relationship which exists between the United States and the Native Hawaiian people, the Congress has enacted numerous special provisions of law for the benefit of Native Hawaiians in the areas of health, education, labor, and housing.

"(13) In 1981, the Senate instructed the Office of Education to submit to the Congress a comprehensive report on Native Hawaiian education. The report, entitled the 'Native Hawaiian Educational Assessment Project', was released in 1983 and documented that Native Hawaiians scored below parity with national norms on standardized achievement tests, were disproportionately represented in many negative social and physical statistics, indicative of special educational needs, and had educational needs which were related to their unique cultural situation, such as different learning styles and low self-image.

"(14) In recognition of the educational needs of Native Hawaiians, in 1988, the Congress enacted title IV of the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988 to authorize and develop supplemental educational programs to benefit Native Hawaiians.

"(15) In 1993, the Kamehameha Schools Bishop Estate released a ten-year update of the Native Hawaiian Educational Assessment Project, which found that despite the successes of the programs established under title IV of the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988, many of the same educational needs still exist for Native Hawaiians. For example—

"(A) educational risk factors continue to start even before birth for many Native Hawaiian children, including—

"(i) late or no prenatal care;

"(ii) half of Native Hawaiian women who give birth are unmarried; and

"(iii) high rates of births to teenage parents;

"(B) Native Hawaiian students continue to begin their school experience lagging behind other students in terms of readiness factors such as vocabulary test scores;

"(C) Native Hawaiian students continue to score below national norms on standardized education achievement tests at all grade levels;

"(D) both public and private schools continue to show a pattern of lower percentages of Native Hawaiian students in the uppermost achievement levels and in gifted and talented programs;

"(E) Native Hawaiian students continue to be overrepresented among students qualifying for special education programs provided to students with learning disabilities, mild mental retardation, emotional impairment, and other such disabilities;

"(F) Native Hawaiians continue to be underrepresented in institutions of higher education and among adults who have completed four or more years of college;

"(G) Native Hawaiians continue to be disproportionately represented in many negative social and physical statistics, indicative of special educational needs, for example—

"(i) Native Hawaiian students are more likely to be retained in grade level and to be excessively absent in secondary school;

"(ii) Native Hawaiian students are the highest users of drugs and alcohol; and

"(iii) Native Hawaiian children continue to be disproportionately victimized by child abuse and neglect; and

"(H) Native Hawaiians now comprise over 23 percent of the students served by the State of Hawai'i Department of Education and there are and will continue to be geographically rural, isolated areas with a high Native Hawaiian population density.

"(16) The findings described in paragraphs (1) through (15) are contrary to the high rate of literacy and integration of traditional culture and Western education achieved by Native Hawaiians through a Hawaiian language-based public school system established in 1840 by Kamehameha III.

"(17) After the overthrow of the Kingdom of Hawai'i in 1893, Hawaiian medium schools were banned. After annexation, throughout the territorial and statehood period, and until 1986, use of Hawaiian as a medium of education in public schools was declared unlawful, thereby causing incalculable harm to a culture that placed a very high value on the power of language, as exemplified in the traditional saying: 'I ka 'ōlelo no ke ola; I ka 'ōlelo no ka make. In the language rests life; In the language rests death.'.

“(18) Despite the consequences of over 100 years of nonindigenous influence, the Native Hawaiian people are determined to preserve, develop, and transmit to future generations their ancestral territory, and their cultural identity in accordance with their own spiritual and traditional beliefs, customs, practices, language, and social institutions.

“(19) The State of Hawai'i, in the constitution and statutes of the State of Hawai'i—

“(A) acknowledges the distinct land rights of Native Hawaiian people as beneficiaries of the public lands trust;

“(B) reaffirms and protects the unique right of the Native Hawaiian people to practice and perpetuate their culture and religious customs, beliefs, practices, and language; and

“(C) recognizes the traditional language of the Native Hawaiian people as an official language of the State of Hawai'i, which may be used as the language of instruction for all subjects and grades in the public school system.

“(20) It continues to be the policy of the Federal Government to encourage the maximum participation of Native Hawaiians in planning and management of Native Hawaiian education programs.

“SEC. 9303. PURPOSE.

“It is the purpose of this part to—

“(1) authorize and develop supplemental educational programs to benefit Native Hawaiians;
